What a useful life has ended. I think there never was a more conscientious teacher than Mrs. Lacy. Nor a more unselfish workman. When I think of her as she appeared at Peace, she was always doing something for other people, and always so kind, with such excellent good sense, and such a vigilant guardian of her great charge. We all loved her. How will Peace do without her? And think of dear Dr. Lacy left behind. No one's loss is like his.

Yesterday we drove out to the "Soldier's Home," a beautiful park about five miles from the city. There are pretty residences here and there in it where the President's family and other "quality folk" some times spend part of the summer. The park is kept in beautiful order. Some parts are kept wild on purpose, for the picturesque effect, and the tangled brushwood, and dog-wood berries, and ferns, and laurel thickets reminded me of North Carolina woods. What did not remind me of the dear old State were the smooth kept carriage drives and walks winding in all directions, the pretty little rustic bridges and seats, the artificial lakes with drooping willows hanging over them and swans sailing on them, the long avenues lined with maples and pretty gate lodges, the fountains, the trim lawns, and at every point glimpses of the city and the Capitol over the trees.

There is a very handsome bronze statue of General Scott in the grounds. The attitude is very fine, and yet easy. He leans back on his cane and looks over toward the city. The moon rose before we left the park, and you may imagine how that added to my enjoyment. We entered the city so as to drive through the Capitol grounds, and Pennsylvania avenue. I would not take anything for the recollection of that grand building by moonlight, the long rows of white columns and statues glistening; and the full moon appearing to hang directly over the figure of the Goddess of Liberty on the top of the dome. I take great pride in that capitol. It gives me a feeling of the grandeur of the nation, of the United States of America, for the first time. We drove directly up the avenue which was a blaze of lights and thronged with people and vehicles of every sort, including bicycles which roll swiftly and noiselessly over these smooth asphalt streets,—a small light in front to indicate their approach. These broad Washington streets are so delightful for driving.

18th. This morning I went to the great city market again. It is such a pleasure to go round and order your dinner. I am struck with the real taste displayed in arranging everything; not merely exquisite neatness, but attention to artistic effect. Even the way in which the meats are cut and set forth to look tempting. Pyramids of peaches, grapes, apples. The California plums of richest purple are as large as hen's eggs. And the flowers! the flowers! Bushel baskets of heads of heliotrope, of tuberoses, of dahlias and gladiolus lilies, and all, the best of their kind. Nothing, half-way or inferior.

20th. I heard Dr. Paxton preach in the New Jersey Avenue Presbyterian Church yesterday. A fine church, and a fine organ, and a fine congregation and fine singing of our good old tunes. A man stands opposite the choir and beats time during the singing. Services opened with singing the L. M. Doxology. Reading the commandments. Repeating the Lord's Prayer in concert, and chanting the "Gloria." All very different from Presbyterian service that I have been accustomed to. Dr. Paxton's discourses was a warning against worldliness and setting your heart upon riches. Uncle C. was delighted with it. We heard Mr. Wood, a delegate from Glasgow at night. His Scotch accent and indistinct utterance made me lose much of the sermon.

22d. Yesterday I spent the morning in the Corcoran Art Gallery. I recognized many pictures that I saw at the Centennial and in New York. The ceiling of the gallery is frescoed with pictures taken from the old masters. Church's Niagara is there. There is a ray of rainbow colored light over one of the falls, and N. avowed it was the sunlight through the window until we went close to examine it. A small picture of the "Virgin and Child," by Murillo which I never would have noticed had I not seen his name. You know he and Velasquez were the first great painters who represented the Virgin with dark hair and eyes. There is a picture by Durand that pleased me very much. "Entrance to a Wood"; huge old oaks, bright green foliage, moss, ferns and rippling streams broadening into a river in the distance, and mountains beyond it. I am more struck than ever before by the vivid colors of these paintings. The o were sunsets and autumn tints as gorgeous as you ever see them in nature. A view of Mt. Corcoran (Sierra Nevada) in California was grand. The snow-capped mountain environed with clouds. At its foot in the foreground a sheet of the most limpid water. I thought it could not be painted,—flowers and grasses of all colors on its borders. These pictures are so immense. There is not space in any wall in our house where either of the two I have described could be hung. They are not meant to be looked at close at hand. The effects are all calculated for distance. There was a darling naked baby lying back on blue silk cushions, as lovely and perfect as anything you ever saw. I don't know of a more disgusting effect than is produced by the attempts of some French painter to represent the Almighty.

Some of the statuary is exquisite, even to my untaught eyes. "The Greek Slave"; "The Veiled Nun"; "The Forced Prayer" is charming. A little boy about three years old, clasping his fat hands together with his eyes tightly shut, two large tears dropping on his cheeks, and his under lip stuck out in a terrible pout. There are many plaster cast copies of work of the great sculptors. Several ladies were in the room sketching from the figures. Of all the statuary "The Death of Napoleon" pleased me most. He is represented reclining in a large easy chair, supported by pillows and partially covered by a counterpane. His shirt collar is open showing his wasted neck and chest. But his eyes! the expression of hopeless melancholy, and despair, and approaching death. Yet the mouth is as firm set as ever, and one hand grasps a small map of Europe which is spread out before him; but he seems too far gone to care for it, for he looks off as if wearied of it all. The work on all the details is so minute, the very buttons and wrinkles on the pillowcase are perfect.

We have been walking over the White House. The grounds there, as all the grounds I see in Washington are most beautifully kept. The view from the back windows is very lovely. The shining Potomac near by, the green lawns and beds of splendid flowers and brilliant foliage plants stretching down to the water's edge, and then the fountains! What a perpetual play of light and coolness and beauty they are. Why don't we have fountains in North Carolina?

The White House was undergoing a cleaning up, which it certainly needed. Black cobwebs in the ceiling and sides of the front porch are no ways ornamental. We got no further than the East room, which is handsome; as large as our University Library, with plenty of gilding and frescoing, magnificent mirrors, fine glass chandeliers. Matting on the floor, and furniture upholstered in gray satin and garnet velvet, a little the worse for wear, a fine, fancy, full-length picture of Martha Washington, and hanging by it an ugly one of George.

"See," said Luther one evening when money to supply his wants was scarce, "see that little bird has chosen its shelter, and is about to go to sleep in tranquility. It has no disquiet, neither does it wonder where it shall rest to-morrow night, but it sits in peace on its slender branch, leaving God to provide for it."

LETTER FROM REV. J. W. DAVIS.

SOOCHOW, CHINA, Sept. 20th, 1880.

DEAR MR. EDITOR:—I have reached Soochow and am about to begin building the much needed church. If I am not molested I hope to finish the work that I am able to do now, and have the church in such a condition that it can be used by the middle of December. I earnestly ask for the prayers of the readers of the PRESBYTERIAN that I may not be in any way interrupted in this important work, by the people or by the mandarins.

In a former letter I alluded to some of those who had sent aid for the work of building a church in Soochow. There has been sent to me recently through the hands of Orin D. Davis, Esq., Salisbury, N. C., the following amount which is a part of the thousand dollars sent me by Dr. McIlwaine. Mr. Orin Davis sent the money to Dr. McIlwaine and he sent it to me.

Before giving this list let me say that before this thousand dollars was sent me, I had received since 1876 various remittances through Mr. O. D. Davis which amounted in all to ($390) three hundred and ninety dollars. Your readers who knew that I was looking for $1,000 to use in this work may have been surprised to hear so soon that I had bought the land. If any one should feel disposed to ask, "how is it that thou hast found it so quickly, my son," the answer is found in the fact that I had this $390 on hand and by advancing $130 to be added to it I made up enough to buy a lot. It is not the lot that I at first had in view, the lot that I was so anxious to buy was very large and cheap, but the title was not so good as the title to the land I have. So I went forward and bought the lot for ($520), five hundred and twenty dollars, and will use the main part of the thousand dollars in improving the place. I say a "thousand dollars" because your readers are familiar with the fact that Dr. McIlwaine has forwarded that amount to me. They will be glad to know that the bill of exchange which was sent me has been sold advantageously. Dr. McIlwaine bought it in United States of America for ($1,000) one thousand dollars. It was sold in Shanghai for more than that, the excess was seventy eight dollars and thirty-one cents. So that I have more dollars than my friends sent me. The amount is ($1,078.31) one thousand and seventy-eight dollars and thirty-one cents. I will now give the list which shows how much of this was sent me through O. D. Davis:

Back Creek Church, Rev. J. A. Ramsay	$21 32
Thyatira Church, Rev. J. A. Ramsay,	7 00
Rev. J. A. Ramsay	3 85
Lady in Concord, N. C.	1 00
Ladies Association, Rocky River Church	10 00
Rev. J. C. Kennedy	10 00
Ladies Association, Salisbury, N. C., Mrs. J. Rumple, President,	50 00
Mrs. Jane Knox, Mrs. D. Coit and three children, Charlotte, N. C.,	4 00
Morganton Church, Rev. R. B. Anderson	17 00
Taylorsville Church, Rev. T. G. Thurston	10 10
Mooresville Church, Rev. P. T. Penick	8 00
Bethany Church, W. L. Dunlap	2 00
Unity Church, S. S. Culberton,	32 25
Franklin Church, Rev. R. W. Boyd,	14 35
Centre Church, Iredell county, John H. Reid	27 00
Benjamin Young and John H. Reid, Centre Church	25 00
O. D. Davis	1 30
D. A. Davis	5 00
Prof. Addison Hoge	10 00
Savannah Church, Rev. E. C. Gordon,	12 00
Dr. John B. Gaither and wife	1 50
Columbus, Ga., Church, Rev. R. P. Kerr,	16 00
Miss Bessie Merrill, Columbus, Ga.	2 50
Charles Monroe, Columbus, Ga.,	5 00
Misses M. & J. Schmucker, Williamsburg, Pa.,	5 00
Lady in Statesville, N. C.,	1 00
Rev. L. B. Turnbull,	5 00
Hamner Davis Society, Fredericksburg, Va.,	20 00
Mary and Bessie J., Alexandria, Va.,	5 00
	$332 17

The reader will observe that the greater part of the above amount came from churches and friends in the presbyteries of Concord and Mecklenburg, and I desire to call attention to the fact that the greater part of the $390 already alluded to came from the same region. It came mainly from Salisbury, Charlotte, Davidson College, Concord Church, Iredell county, Centre Church, Taylorsville Church and Lenoir. From this it will appear that the amount used in buying the lot, viz. $520, is covered by the gifts sent from these two presbyteries. But I must not speak too particularly for the whole Synod has responded so promptly and kindly to my appeal and without the aid of the whole I could not be able to begin building the church.

The work to be done is to clear away the rubbish from the land; build a wall around the lot, and erect the church. As I have something less than a thousand dollars to use in doing all this I shall hardly be able to complete the church, but can put it into such a condition that it can be used. After the work is done I will write to you again.

Yours very truly.
JOHN W. DAVIS.

HANDS OUT YOUNG MAN.

To begin with, it does not look well, when a young man crooks his arms and thrusts his hands into his pockets, making a figure eight of himself, and then stands up against the sunny side of the house, like a rooster in December.

How would the girls look, all turned into eights and leaning against the wall? How would your mother look in that posture? Catch her doing it! You don't find her hands in her pockets. Your mother's hands! While you are loafing, they are the hands that sew, and bake, and scrub, and fry, and sweep, and darn, and nurse; but she does not sink them in her pockets, and then loll against the building.

Are your hands cold? Warm them up at the end of the hoe-handle and the scythe. Swing the hammer; drive the plane; flourish the axe. There is untold caloric about a spade, a trowel, a wrench.

Besides, pocket-heat is not profitable. Have you money there, though? Are your pockets the safe in which you have hidden treasure, and are your hands the bolts that secure the safe-door? Money may be there to-day, but it won't be a guest over to-morrow night. An idler's money is apt to leap out of his pocket. It is likely to go for a pipe, a cigar, a tobacco-plug, a mug of ale. There is no money in pocket-warming.

Take your hands out of your pockets, young man! You are losing time. Time is valuable. People feel it at the other end of the line when death is near and eternity is pressing them into such small quarters, for the work of this life craves hours, days, weeks, years. If those at this end of the line, if youth with its abundance of resources would only feel that time was precious! Time is a quarry. Every hour may be a nugget of gold. It is time in whose invaluable moments we build our bridges, spike the iron rails to the sleepers, launch our ships, dig our canals, run our factories. You might have planted twenty hills of potatoes while I have been talking to you, young man. Take your hands out of your pockets.

The world wants those hands. The world is not dead, asleep under the Pyramids, a mummy by the Nile. The world is alive, wide awake, pushing, struggling, going ahead. The world wants those hands. You need not take them out of America. They can find a market here at home. The country wants those hands, selling dry goods in New York, cradling wheat in Minnesota, raising cotton in Alabama, weaving cloth in Lowell, picking oranges in Florida, digging gold in Colorado, catching mackerel from the deck of a down-east fishing smack. Take your hands out of your pockets!

And what a laudable thing it is to meet the wants of society and do your best!—When you are an old man, what an honorable thing your hand will be!

Did you ever think of the dignity investing the wrinkled hand of an old worker? It has been so useful, lifted so many burdens, and wrought in such honorable service. Who wants a hand without a character when old age comes on—a soft, flabby, donothing hand?

You are willing to work, you say, but can't find anything to do?

Nothing to do! Do the first thing that comes along. Saw wood, get in coal, go on errands. In short, do anything honest with your hands, but don't let them loaf in your pockets.—Golden Days.

SOMEHOW OR OTHER.

Life has a burden for every man's shoulder,
None may escape from its trouble and care;
Miss it in youth, and 'twill come when we're older.
And fit us as close as the garments we wear.

Sorrow comes into our lives uninvited,
Robbing our hearts of their treasures and song;
Lovers grow cold and friendships are slighted,
Yet somehow or other we worry along.

Every-day toil is every-day blessing,
Though poverty's cottage and crust we may share;
Weak is the back on which burdens are pressing,
But stout is the heart that is strengthened by prayer.

Somehow or other the pathway grows brighter
Just when we mourn there are none to befriend;
Hope in the heart makes the burden seem lighter,
And somehow or other we get to the end.

PANDORA BOX.

A mysterious tin box painted black, with a skull and cross-bones portrayed on the lid, was carried by Professor Eli Johnson to the platform at one of the meetings of the Temperance Congress, and was the subject of much curiosity. During his address Professor Johnson opened the box and disclosed a number of bottles containing chemicals, with a book of directions explaining their use. The box had been procured at the sale of the effects of a deceased wholesale druggist, and by the aid of the accompanying book Professor Johnson said he was able to produce from the chemicals, imitations of French brandy, whiskey, gin, port and sherry wine, and other famous beverages, so closely resembling the genuine article that even connoisseurs failed to detect the deception. He said there was no doubt that much of the liquor retailed at the bars of our cities was made in that way, and many of the ingredients used were deadly poisons. The book also contained a receipt for a preparation which, properly applied, gave new barrels the appearance of age.

THE GAIN OF SUNDAY REST.

Of course, I do not mean that a man will not produce more in a week by working seven days than by working six days. But I very much doubt whether, at the end of the year, he will generally have produced more by working seven days a week, than by working six days a week; and I firmly believe that at the end of twenty years he will have produced less by working seven days a week than by working six days a week. The natural difference between Campania and Spitzbergen is trifling, when compared with the difference between a country inhabited by men full of bodily and mental vigor, and a country inhabited by men sunk in bodily and mental decrepitude. Therefore it is that we are not poorer, but richer, because we have through many ages rested from our labor one day in seven. That day is not lost. While industry is suspended, while the plough lies in the furrow, while the exchange is silent, while no smoke ascends from the factory, a process is going on quite as important to the wealth of the nation as any process which is performed on more busy days. Man, the machine of machines—the machine compared with which all the contrivances of the Watts and Arkwrights are worthless—is repairing and winding up, so that he returns to his labors on the Monday with clearer intellect, with livelier spirits, with renewed corporeal vigor.—Macaulay.

CHRIST OUR LORD.

Jesus Christ is the most certain, the most sacred, the most glorious, of all facts; arrayed in a beauty and majesty which throws the "starry heavens above us and the normal law within us" into obscurity, and fills us truly with evergrowing reverence and awe. He shines forth with the self-evidencing light of the noonday sun. He is too great, too pure, too perfect, to have been invented by any sinful and erring man. His character and claims are confirmed by the sublimest doctrine, the purest ethics, the mightiest miracles, the grandest spiritual kingdom, and are daily and hourly exhibited in the virtues and graces of all who yield to the regenerating and sanctifying power of his spirit and example. The historical Christ meets and satisfies all our intellectual and moral wants. The soul, if left to its noblest impulses and aspirations, instinctively turns to him, as the needle to the magnet, as the flower to the sun, as the panting heart to the fresh fountain. We are made for him, and "our heart is without rest until it rests in him." He commands our assent, he wins our admiration, he overwhelms us with adoring wonder. We cannot look upon him without spiritual benefit. We cannot think of him without being elevated above all that is low and mean, and encouraged to all that is good and noble. The very hem of his garment is healing to the touch. One hour spent in his communion outweighs all the pleasures of sin. He is the most precious and indispensable gift of a merciful God to a fallen world. In him are the treasures of true wisdom, in him the fountain of pardon and peace, in him the only substantial hope and comfort in this world and that which is to come. Mankind could better afford to lose the whole literature of Greece and Rome, of Germany and France, of England and America, than the story of Jesus of Nazareth. Without him history is a dreary waste, an inextricable enigma, a chaos of facts without a meaning, connection, and aim: with him it is a beautiful, harmonious revelation of God, the slow but sure unfolding of a plan of infinite wisdom and love.—Francis Ridley Havergal.

GOOD ADVICE TO MARRIED PEOPLE.

A worthy wife of forty years' standing, and whose life was not made of sunshine and peace, gave the following impressive advice to a married pair of her acquaintance. The advice is so good and so well suited to all married people, as well as to those entering that state, that we here publish it for the benefit of such persons:

"Preserve sacredly the privacies of your own house, your married state and your heart! Let no father or mother, or sister, or brother, ever presume to come between you, or share the joys or sorrows that belong to you two alone. With mutual help build your quiet world, not allowing your dearest earthly friend to be the confident of aught that concerns your domestic peace. Let moments of alienation, if they occur, be healed at once. Never, no never, speak of it outside, but to each other confess, and all will come out right. Never let the morrow's sun still find you at variance. Renew and renew your vow; it will do you good, and thereby your minds will grow together, contented in that love, which is stronger than death, and you will become truly one."

COMTINUE IN PRAYER.

A tree does not always drop its fruits at the first shake you give it. Shake it again, man; give it another shake! And, sometimes, when the tree is loaded, and is pretty firm in the earth, you have to shake it to and fro, and at last you plant your feet, and get hold of it, and shake it with might and main, till you strain every muscle and sinew to get the fruit down. And that is the way to pray. Shake the tree of life until the mercy drops into your lap. Christ loves men to beg hard. You can not be too importunate. That which might be disagreeable to your fellow-creatures when you beg of them will be agreeable to Christ. Oh, get ye to your chambers; get ye to your chambers, ye that have not found Christ! To your bedsides, to your little closets, and "seek the Lord while he may be found; call ye upon him while he is near!" May the Spirit of God constrain you to continue in prayer.—Sel.

ONE OPPORTUNITY.

The following words have gone the newspaper rounds before, but they are so beautiful as to be entitled to the second circulation. "I expect to pass through this world but once. Any good thing, therefore, that I can do, or any kindness I can show to any fellow-creature, let me do it now. Let me not defer or neglect it, for I shall not pass this way again." It is the suggestion of opportunity: the declaration of duty as enforced by the thought of our passing away never to return. We may reflect in the other life upon the good we might have done while remaining here, and think, too, how much we could do if back again; but the way is hedged against our return. We shall "not pass this way again."

GOLD DUST.

It is one characteristic of genius to do great things with little things.

A loving heart encloses within itself an unfading and eternal Eden.

Lowliness is the base of every virtue:
And he who goes the lowest, builds the safest.

Those are the best Christians who are more careful to reform themselves than to censure others.—Fuller.

Conviction, were it ever so excellent, is worthless till it convert itself into conduct.—Carlyle.

Thou knowest but little,
If thou dost think true virtue is confined
To cliimes or system; no it flows spontaneous,
Like life's warm stream, throughout the whole creation,
And beats the pulse of every healthful heart.
—Miller

Let those who would affect singularity with success, first determine to be very virtuous, and they will be sure to be very singular.—Colton.

It is with certain good qualities as with the senses; those who are entirely deprived of them can neither appreciate nor comprehend them.—La Rochefoucauld.

'Tis a little thing
To give a cup of water; yet its draught
Of cool refreshment, drained by fevered lips,
May give a shock of pleasure to the frame
More exquisite than when nectarean juice
Renews the life of joy in happiest hours.
—Talfourd.

The religious are often charged with judging uncharitably of others; and perhaps the charge may at times be desired. With our narrow, partial views, it is very difficult to feel the evil of our error strongly, and yet to think kindly of him in whom we see it.

Whatever faith touches it turns into our good. It is a sword to defend, a guide to direct, a staff to support, a friend to comfort, and a golden key to open heaven to us.—Brooks.

A few strong instincts and a few plain rules should govern us, and among them one ought, if possible, to cherish an undying love of truth, not abstract truth, but the every-day article, which "shall make you free" of shams, worldliness and the artificial and hollow politeness which neither deceives nor improves its votaries and its victims.—Wordsworth.

We call him great who does some deed
That echo bears from shore to shore,
Does that, and then does nothing more;
Yet would his work earn richer meed,
When brought before the King of kings,
Were he but greater in little things.

Think truly, and thy thought
Shall some soul's famine feed;
Speak truly, and each word of thine
Shall be a fruitful seed;
Live truly and thy life shall be
A grand and noble creed.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from Exchanges:

A Mexican Presbyterian church was organized September 5, at the ranch of Juan B. Chacon, near Conejos, Col., by Rev. Alexander M. Darley.

The Rev. A. A. Fulton, who graduated at Union Theological Seminary in May last, left Indianapolis, Ind., last week, on his way to join the Presbyterian Mission at Canton, China.

Dr. Jessup, of Syria, in a recent very interesting address at Milwaukee, said: "It would have done Dr. Ray Palmer's heart good to have heard three hundred Mohammedan girls singing the hymn, 'My faith looks up to Thee,' translated into their own language."

The Synod of the Spanish Protestant Church met in Madrid in May last. Seventeen churches and missions were represented. There has been some disturbance in the churches, as one of the pastors has gone over to Prelacy, and in company with Bishop Riley, of Mexico, has attempted to set up an Episcopal church in Spain, representing that the church, as organized there, was inefficient and unprosperous. Nevertheless the work goes on, and two churches, one in the province of Toledo and another in the province of Salamanca, have been lately formed.

A memorial from the Working Men's Protestant League has been forwarded to the Home Secretary expressing apprehension at the gradual innovations caused by Ritualists and Romanists, and especially by the latter, who "are encroaching on the sanctity of the Sabbath by their demonstrations in the public streets on that day," and calling attention to meetings held by the "League of the Cross" at Clerkenwell Green and Tower Hill on two successive Sundays. The memorialists pray the Home Secretary to take steps to prevent any disturbance through the infraction of the Sabbath law and outraging the feelings of the mass of this Protestant community.

The rumors concerning negotiations between the Ritualists of Great Britain and the Vatican for reunion are revived. An Anglican Colonial Bishop sent to the Pope lately a Latin brochure privately printed. A correspondent of an English journal, writing from Rome, says that he has read the pamphlet carefully, and finds it an argument for the validity of the English Episcopate and the sacraments of the English Church. At the end the Bishop appeals to the Pope to convoke the Ecumenical Council which adjourned in 1870 in the midst of the throes of war, and invite the English Episcopate to join it.

Professor Robertson Smith's case promises to be a tedious process of investigation. As many of the members are attending the Pan-Presbyterian Council at Philadelphia, the committee appointed by the Commission of the Free Church Assembly, who have been instructed to bring up a report on the new phase of Professor Smith's case, have resolved to delay further proceedings until next month. In the meantime the members of committee not in possession of the copy of the "Encyclopædia Britannica," containing the articles in question, have been furnished with one, and asked in a circular issued by the convener of the committee to read up the subject, and to forward to him any suggestions or opinions they may have to offer under the remit made to the committee.

There is no real religion without its experience. If the love of the Saviour is in us, and if we exercise a faith in him that is honest and thorough, our life that is so grounded will be felt and will show itself by appropriate manifestation.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1880.

CUSTOM, NOT LAW.

Prescription swells often into the very proportions and force of statute law. Yet it may be that it is obeyed without sufficient reason, and would be more honored in the breach than the observance. This may be illustrated by some customs that have grown up in some of our Presbyteries and Synods, that in the opinion of many should not prevail.

One custom, not to be commended, is that the moderator of Presbytery or Synod shall preach the sermon on Sabbath morning. Now the preaching services, except the opening sermon by the moderator, are usually expected to be arranged by a committee of which the pastor of the church entertaining the court is chairman. It is desirable that one of the best sermonizers should occupy the pulpit on Sabbath morning: one, from whose humble and earnest efforts the best spiritual results are to be expected. Notoriously moderators are not selected with reference to their pulpit efficiency; and some of the very best clergymen, men of fine sense, scholarship and executive abilities, and who make capital presiding officers, are dull preachers, and would by no means be chosen by the pastors or people to preach at the time named. But as custom says they must preach then, the committee feel that they must unwillingly assign him the duty. The moderator ought to occupy just the same position as every other minisister present, and have no more claim to any special service.

Another reprehensible custom is that no member of the Presbytery, within whose bounds Synod meets, shall preach during the sessions. The host, it is said, should give all honor to the guests. This principle of civility will apply well to the pastor of the individual church where Synod meets, but not at all to any other member of that Presbytery. No good reason exists for the restriction. It may be that, by common consent, the man whom the whole Synod would prefer to hear before all others, belongs to the Presbytery, silenced by custom. No other opportunity besides these state assemblages occurs, oftentimes, when many of the leading men in the church can be heard. A fair and generous selection should be made from all sections of the State, the chief consideration in the choice being the prospect of an edifying discourse.

It is to be questioned also whether the restriction be wise, that the moderator of Synod must be chosen from that Presbytery, within which the body convenes. Perhaps this habit arose from the desire that every Presbytery should be duly honored with the moderatorship; and to avoid any unpleasant feelings, that might arise by selection of the presiding officer too frequently from the same Presbytery. But oh! petty jealousies like these should not arise among Christian brethren, met to do the Lord's business. Might not similar regulations be applied to our General Assembly? Does it seem at all needful? Is it not rather embarrassing? The honor—and it is an honor to preside over a Presbyterian Synod—is slow in getting around; in our State only once in five years to each Presbytery, and soon it may be once in six years. Let that exalted position be conferred on some one whom the church delights to honor, no matter where he resides.

Let another doubt be propounded. Synod now rotates from one Presbytery to another in due order, without any reference to convenience, to the difference in the number of places in our Presbyteries capable of entertaining, and desiring to entertain, the church court, or to any other reason than that such a Presbytery is next in order. Might it not be judicious to leave the selection of the place of meeting open to general considerations; and to have full liberty to elect that point, which existing circumstances of the church demand as best?

We are by no means an innovator or a seeker after new things. Let us try to do whatever is for the very best interest of our beloved Church. It seems to us that in some, if not in all, of the customs named, decided advantages would accrue from some changes. Let prayerful consideration be bestowed on the suggestions, and let whatever is done be done simply for the glory of God. Promoting the efficiency of the church in saving souls, and building up saints, is our greatest work on earth.

REVISED DIRECTORY FOR WORSHIP, &c.

The last General Assembly impliedly instructed the committee having this matter in charge, to publish for distribution, a sufficient number of copies to supply every Presbytery and every Session with a copy, in order to a thorough study of the same against the fall meetings of the several constituent judicatories. Up to this date, however, we have heard of nothing that has been done in the premises, and our surprise prompts us to ask what is the matter. There must, we presume, be some potential reason for the delay; but what it is we cannot so much as conjecture. The document was laid before the Assembly in May, and why has it not been printed and scattered in accordance with the expectation of that body? For our own part, we would like, and very much like, to see and to examine its contents. We have understood that serious alterations are therein suggested for the consideration of the Church, but what precisely they are no one outside of the committee seems to be able to opine. One of our North Carolina Presbyteries sent an overture to the last Assembly, on the subject of a certain form of burial service; it was committed to the committee of revision, who ought by this time, to have told us what they are going to propose touching the same. There are other matters, too, which they are bound as speedily as possible to bring to the attention of Presbyteries, if it be expected that the Staunton Assembly shall take definite action upon the same. That whole subject of ritual, or quasi-ritual, (or by whatsoever other name it may come to be styled,) which has of late months been exciting interest and even discussion in certain portions of the great Presbyterian family—we should like to see this well brought out and put to rest one way or another—which, in our Church at least cannot be conclusively done until we have in our hands the so-far completed work of the Committee of Revision. When, then, may its forthcoming be expected? Doubtless the committee is not to be blamed, but yet are they getting ready to report in time to allow full examination? We do not wish to be regarded as finding fault; only as expressing an impatience that is not altogether unjustifiable.

Whilst in our present mood we would also enquire what has become of the "Abstracts" that were ordered to be prepared by the majority and minority of the Committee on Retrenchment and Reform?

"WISER IN THEIR GENERATION."

"We suggest that our merchants and business men suspend all business on Tuesday, so as to give one day to the important work of the election."

So runs a paragraph in one of our leading political papers, and we take it as a text from which to preach one of our out-of-church sermons. It suggests one of the thousands of illustrations of the sad truth that the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light. For weeks the country has been in a blaze of excitement throughout its whole borders from Maine to Texas, from the Atlantic to the Pacific. For months there has been steady careful preparation; the very first steps have been carefully taken, measures thoughtfully discussed, methods and plans developed, and with patience and perseverance worthy of admiration, sedulously carried out without rest or relaxation of energy or vigilance until the issue is decided and the contest over. During all this time the secular press has teemed with the best and most earnest thoughts of the advocates of both parties. The hustings have resounded again and again with the appeals of the ablest and most eloquent of the political speakers, each following hard upon the other. Money has been advanced in large sums and lavishly expended to meet the campaign expenses. Speakers have traveled from county to county, addressing audiences upon every day of the week, and oftentimes spending even Sunday in consultation with the political leaders of the section in which the sacred day finds them. Some of these men perhaps are professing Christians and during these few weeks have done more active service for their party than in their whole life they have done for their God.

Sections have been divided and sub-divided; committees and sub-committees appointed; clubs formed and everything done which perfect organization and united effort could suggest or demand. Some of the most active of these workers are church members and strange to say in church matters they are never prominent.

We step into the court house: the Honorable Mr. So and So is addressing a large audience of interested listeners; this is very probably the fourth or fifth night upon which there has been speaking and still the house is crowded, and strange to say, the audience is composed exclusively of men, numbers of whom are professing Christians whose business never allows them to attend the prayer-meeting, but they are here and have been for several nights; here are some who complain if a sermon is longer than thirty minutes and lo! they are not wearied with two hours and a half's repetition of what they have heard on each successive night and what they have read for weeks in the newspapers; on the contrary, when the speaker after about two hour's talk intimates that he is trespassing upon their patience these men cry excitedly "go on, go on." We attend the prayermeeting and see a small audience composed chiefly of ladies with here and there a gentleman sprinkled about; what contrast to the crowded political meeting!

Such are the indisputable facts. Evidently in the face of these things it is idle for these brethren to plead business as an excuse for non-attendance at the prayermeetings; honesty compels them to acknowledge that they take no interest in them.

Suppose an equal expenditure of active united organized effort were made in the work of the Church, what would be the result?

Suppose the Christian politicians in the various congregations throughout our land worked as zealously to bring men into the kingdom of God as they do to bring them into their party, would we not live in a perpetual revival? Alas not only are the children of this world wiser in their generation than the children of light, but the professed children of light are themselves wiser in the work of the world than in that of their God.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

We have the circular of the North Carolina Historical Society, and want to urge its claims upon North Carolinians every where. Haven't time and space now but will recur to it again.

Thanks for a complimentary ticket to 16th Annual Fair of the Sampson County Agricultural Society to be held on 8th—11th December, prox.

With utter surprise and regret we have learned that an editorial of Oct. 6th, referring to matters in our churches has by some seemed to reflect upon some of our ministers, and to make serious charges against particular congregations, and even to disparage the honesty of the Church as against the world. Our article we cannot feel would naturally justify such views, for those views would apply the sentiments of the article too unrestrictedly in some directions and too particularly in others. There could be no conceivable motive for our doing such things, consequently the presumption we think is in our favor; there is every conceivable motive for our not doing these things, and the presumption amounts to about a certainty.

We regret, seriously regret, the misconception, however, and take occasion without qualification to disclaim any design or intention to do the things imputed to us, and further to disclaim any design to reflect invidiously upon ministers, or other officers, or upon the members, of any particular church, or upon any individual whatever, and especially upon elders and deacons of churches officially, or otherwise.

We prefer making this disclaimer, and making it as broad and general as words can make it, to entering upon a discussion which we cannot think would result in any good.

We have been trying for the past few weeks to get into printed form an expression of our hearty appreciation and pleasure, at the success of the Covenant the Reformed Episcopal paper of Philadelphia. From a semi-weekly it has become hebdomadal and is as spicy and sparkling as ever.

Then there is the Presbyterian Journal of the same city, bounding forward in the race, now under control of Rev. Dr. R. M. Patterson, who is one of the strongest intellects and most vigorous workers of the Northern Church. Always a good paper we count on its making a great name for itself in the future.

And here we announce that the Presbyterial Journal Company are the publishers of the official proceedings of the late Presbyterian Council. The publication will be issued in a few weeks.

We have been trying to keep up with the marriages of our young ministerial brethren. A week or two ago we dotted three, but before the polls were closed there came in others. Evidently its good fun. Rev. Geo. F. Robertson of Arkansas last week, and Rev. J. N. H. Summerell this, have come into the—traces?—No, into the flowery paths of matrimony. We wish the halves and the whole a happy voyage over the ocean of life.

TIMELY THEMES.

There are certain stereotyped phrases which from their very familiarity are in danger of becoming absolutely meaningless, or worse still, absolutely false. They are used simply because they are current coin and the world dealer tosses them from lip or pen without reflecting that their intrinsic worth is not equal to half their face value.

e. g. The writer once heard a theological student of good standing and undoubted piety remark to a circle of acquaintances, discussing such things and possibly recommending some particular work for his consideration, that he was afraid the Spirit of God was calling him to another field of labor; when it was known to at least one of the circle that this student had made decided efforts to secure the field of which he spoke, and had gone so far as to obtain letters in his interest and favor from the faculty. Yet the current phrase, "Spirit of God calling," fell as glibly from his tongue as if he had been entirely passive in the whole matter.

This reminiscence of times gone by was suggested by certain paragraphs in a speech delivered on the floor of the late Episcopal convention in New York, which nails to the counter other counterfeit coin, as follows:

"Now, as to men. I received a letter not very long ago from a young man, saying to me, 'Have you got any encouraging missionary work in Western Texas?' I wrote back to that man that since the days of the apostles to this hour there never had been any difficulty in getting men to do encouraging work of any sort; what we wanted was men who were willing to look the discouraging variety in the face. What does 'encouraging work' mean? Why, that some other man has been there, and that the Holy Ghost had made him a centre for his operations, and radiating from him the Spirit has developed this work, and that some other man who has not been made the centre of any such influence wants to get his place. Now, I say, brethren, that when you come across such a sweet young person as that don't say to him, 'Go West, young man!' Give him a dear little parish, with a sweet little rectory, and let the ladies make slippers for him. Ah, that is not the spirit that is equal to the tearing down of strongholds. Such men as that are not Malakoff-takers. They will never come up against the fortresses of darkness, and I never will tell any man that I have got an easy place for him. I say, 'If you want an easy place, come and make it.'"

"Encouraging work," "promising field of labor," "hopeful outlook," and a host of other expressions used in this connection are oftentimes palpably dishonest.

And here is a timely theme upon which words are ever "in point" and if really in point are ever acceptable, viz: Church work, the conditions of success or the causes of failure. Sometimes the latter stand in the pulpit, sometimes they hide in the pew. Recognize the former case; it is easy to do. Search out the latter; it is not so easy, but still it is possible. Possibly both may operate in your case. If so take both of these selections or if only one, choose that which suits the case.

THE CLERGYMAN AND THE PEDDLER.

A clergyman who longed to trace
Amid his flock a work of grace,
And mourned because, he knew not why,
You fleece kept wet while his kept dry,
While thinking what he could do more,
Heard some one rapping at the door—
And opening it, there met his view
A dear old brother whom he knew,
Who had got down by worldly blows
From wealth to peddling cast-off clothes.
"Come in, my brother," said the pastor,
"Perhaps my trouble you can master,
For, since the summer you withdrew,
My converts have been very few."
"I can," the peddler said, "unroll
Something, perchance, to ease your soul,
And—to cut short all fulsome speeches—
Bring me a pair of your old breeches."
The clothes were brought, the peddler gazed,
And said, "No longer be amazed,
The gloss upon this cloth is such,
I think, perhaps, you sit too much
Building air castles, bright and gay,
Which Satan loves to blow away.
And here behold, as I am born,
The nap from neither knee is worn!
He who would get revivals see,
Must wear his pants out on the knee.
For such the lever prayer supplies—
When pastor's kneel, their churches rise."

THE PARSON'S DREAM.

"The pastor of one of the up-town churches in New York," says the Working Church, "relates the following singular dream: 'Some time ago, I dreamed that I was hitched to a carriage, attempting to draw it through the mud which covered the street in front of my house. How or why I had been assigned that position I could not explain, but there I was, pulling with all my might, as though I had been the best carriage-horse in the town. I had reached a point not far from the church, when the mud seemed to get deeper and deeper, and the carriage to draw so heavily that I gasped for breath and almost sank down exhausted. This seemed the more inexplicable, when, looking back, I saw the entire congregation behind the carriage, apparently pushing it along. But the more I tried, the harder it became, till finally I was forced to stop and examine the difficulty. I went to the rear, where I supposed was the congregation, but nobody could be found. I called, but no answer. I repeated the call several times, but still no reply. By-and-by a voice called out "Hallo!" and looking up, whom should I see but one of the deacons looking complacently out of the window, and upon going to the door of the carriage, what was my astonishment to behold the whole congregation quietly sitting inside.'"

Here is a straw that shows which way the wind is blowing in a certain quarter:

"Miss Annie L. Shaw was last week ordained in Tarrytown, by the New York Methodist Protestant Conference, after considerable discussion and an election, in which she received a majority of only four votes."

What an opportunity for exultation on the part of the liberals! Another break in the impregnable barrier of divine inspiration, besides a violation of the inherent fitness of things. We earnestly hope that breeze will never become a South wind.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

A PLEASANT SURPRISE AND A VALUABLE PRESENT.

Rev. Walter W. Pharr writes: There is a sunny as well as a shady side in ministers lives. It has been said, that variety is the spice of life. This appears to be in accordance with the orderings of Providence, and the laws of nature. God hath set prosperity ever against adversity—very few could long profitably enjoy unbroken prosperity—very few could long endure the uninterrupted storms of adversity. So God hath set the one ever against the other. So that while we taste the one we may see the other. If our climate were all winter or summer it would not be so pleasant. If all spring or fall it would not be so desirable. Continued sameness in any thing or in every thing becomes tiresome. But variety gives a freshness and beauty to employments and enjoyments that keeps them from becoming tiresome. This is a clumsy introduction to a pleasant surprise and a valuable present. One of the large clothing merchants in Charlotte informed me that he had been instructed by the young men of my congregation, in their name and on their account, to present me with a fine suit of clothes. For this valuable and seasonable present, I take this method of expressing my feelings of gratitude to the young men of my pastoral charge. This evidence of affection for, and confidence in their minister, is to him like cold water to a thirsty soul. Like the shadow of a great rock in a weary land. Such presents are valuable in themselves. But they are also an index to a feeling of affection and confidence among those from whom they are received that is of great price. I accompany this acknowledgement with an earnest desire and fervent prayer that the blessing of that Being who has promised that a cup of cold water given to disciple in the name of a disciple, shall not go unrewarded in the day of final reckoning. May His blessing be with them and upon them. And may they find in their own experience the truth of what He has declared in His Word. It is more blessed to give than to receive.

Rev. B. F. Marable writing to us, says: "Please note the death of our darling little Mamie. After fifteen hours of severe suffering from congestion of the brain, she died on Wednesday morning, 3d instant, in her tenth year.

Pure as the lily and sweet as the breath of heaven, the Father has taken her away."

The announcement will awaken the tenderest sympathy for the family in many hearts throughout our Synod.

"PRESBYTERIAN UNION" OF GRANVILLE CO.

This association held its 3d session at Old Geneva church on the fifth Sunday in Oct. and Saturday previous,—all the churches were represented. Saturday was a rainy day but the church was full. Rev. J. W. Primrose preached on Saturday the 7th and Rev. T. U. Fancetto on Sunday morning. Rev. Messrs. Drew and Jordan were unable to attend. The crowd on Sunday was the largest we have yet had. There were fully 500 persons and some thought 600 and 700. It was impossible for all to hear the excellent sermon of Mr. Fancetto and so Mr. Primrose preached from a stump to the outside congregation. The roads were in excellent condition and very many drove out from Oxford. The neighbors of other churches were very kind and professed to be highly pleased. Old Geneva will reap good results we hope from this meeting. Father Ferrell opened with prayer and was delighted and cherished. Saturday's discussion was on the work of the Ruling Elder. The subject for Sunday afternoon was "Christ and little children:—The duties enjoined and hopes encouraged by the Scriptures." These discussions were very profitable. We think we have improved on "Elders and Deacons" Conventions. All ministers, elders and deacons are members of the Union together will all private members of the church who may be present. The 4th session will be held at Oxford church on fifth Sunday in January 1881 and Saturday previous.

MARK'S CREEK, FAYETTEVILLE.

We preached here four days at our last appointment. The Lord was with us. The people were greatly refreshed; six more members were added to our number; making twenty-two additions since August—and forty-four baptisms. Bro. Ferguson assisted me one day. Our people here adopted the acre system, i. e. each family subscribed a fourth, or half or a whole acre, to be cultivated in cotton, and give the proceeds to the church, for 1881. This is a long step forward. If all our churches in the country would adopt this plan, the work would be greatly blessed. To God be all the praise. May He speed His cause. S. C. ALEXANDER.

BETHEL CHURCH, CONCORD.

At a late communion meeting of Bethel church, Concord Presbytery, the names of five persons were added to the roll of communicants, one by certificate and four upon profession of faith in the Redeemer. The roll of our Ladies Missionary Society has reached twenty eight, nearly half the membership of the Church. In addition to the regular monthly dues, several dollars have been earned by cotton picking. It is really cheering to consider that through this society, the church will do more for missions than it has hitherto done for all the benevolent enterprises. Other contributions will not be diminished. G.

CARTHAGE, UNION AND BETHESDA.

Mr. Editor, as you are calling for information from all the churches, I will give you some news from my fall communions, as it is encouraging.

On the first Sabbath in October we had our communion at Carthage. Brother Lacy preached two good sermons on Saturday and Saturday night; on Sabbath I was alone, five persons were added to the church on profession of their faith in Christ, and one by certificate.

On the fourth Sabbath we had communion at Union. Our meeting commenced on Friday with a prayer-meeting and continued until Wednesday night. Rev. E. McNair, D. D., was with us and did all the preaching, not only to the edification, but to the great pleasure and delight of the large crowd that came to hear him. His venerable appearance, his earnest eloquence and his solemn appeals to the impenitent, accompanied by the Spirit produced a profound impression upon all his hearers. As the result of the meeting thirty-four persons made a profession of religion. Thirty united with Union church, backsliders were reclaimed and christians were revived and strengthened. It was a time of refreshing from the Lord. It was prayed for and looked for, and our hopes were not disappointed. For months there have been two weekly prayer-meetings kept up in the congregation; one by officers and members, some distance from the church, the other in Mr. J. E. Kelly's Academy at the church, kept up by the students. Many of the students were among the converts. Dr. McNair remained over and preached for us with his usual vigor and eloquence at Bethesda on the fifth Sabbath. On Sabbath we had the largest congregation and the largest number of communicants that has enjoyed that sacred ordinance in Bethesda for years, and although there was but one addition to the church, still it was good to be there. "For the divine Master brought us into his banqueting house, and his banner over us was love." "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name we give glory, for thy mercy and for thy truth's sake."

OXFORD.

Rev. J. W. Primrose writes: My installation as pastor of Oxford Church took place on the 24th ult., the fourth Sabbath in October. The Rev. H. T. Darnall of Durham presided, preached and charged the church and the Rev. D. E. Jordan charged the pastor. Mr. Jordon also preached at night. The congregations were large and attentive. Mr. Jordan who resigned the charge of this church to take up his residence in Henderson, where the church has made rapid growth, was greeted gladly by his many friends here. The Oxford church was much pleased to make the acquaintance of Mr. Darnall.

The ladies of this congregation, who owned the former manse, sold it some time since, and with the proceeds had erected on the church premises a commodious and handsome new manse, most admirably constructed for the comfort of the occupants. They had also newly roofed the church, painted it and penciled the brick walls so that it presents now the finest appearance of any church building in Oxford. I reached here, traveling through the country twenty-five miles, after dark on the 20th ult. Oxford, Grassy Creek and Shiloh churches which I now serve, kindly furnished transportation, and I have to acknowledge the receipt of very many kindnesses besides, which are highly appreciated.

MILLS RIVER CHURCH, HENDERSON CO., N. C.

Rev. S. T. Martin, Evangelist, writes, November 5th: For three weeks past the services have been specially interesting. On the 1st Sabbath of this period, Mr. J. Tyler Williams was ordained and installed Deacon. The session was convened on Saturday and after examination of the candidate, approved the evidence of his call, and took order for the ordination on Sabbath. The session convened on Sabbath at the hour for worship and the usual services were held, including sermon, exposition of the theory of vocation, of the nature of and warrant for the office, and of the qualifications required. After the ordination, by the laying on of the hands of the session and prayer, a charge was given to the new Deacon. The audience was large and evinced solemn interest. The next Sabbath the sacraments of the Lord's supper and of infant baptism were administered; on the following Sabbath, adult baptism and public profession of converts. The baptism on one Sabbath was accompanied by a discussion of the proper subject of baptism and on the other by a discussion of the mode of baptism. There was preaching twice a day for nearly a week—the pastor being assisted by Revs. J. P. Gammon and W. H. Davis. The presence of the Holy Spirit was evinced throughout. Six professed faith in Christ. Two who had been for some time under the special instruction of the session united with the church. Some of God's people who were in darkness are walking in the light; some who were wandering are restored. It is hoped that the gracious Spirit is still working His own work. The last day of service the attendance was larger than on any previous day and a solemn interest pervaded the congregation. During the service in the week, although it was a busy season with the farmers, yet every one of the officers and nearly all of the members of the church, turned aside from their ordinary business and attended upon the worship of the sanctuary. In the country this does not, as in the city, involve merely the absence from daily employment, for an hour or so, often only at night, but it involves absence from daily employment for the entire day. It is, therefore, itself a manifestation of the grace of God, when his people, denying themselves and exercising faith in Him, can turn away from the cares of this world to attend to the interests of the kingdom of God.

BIBLE REVISION.

42 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK, Nov. 1, 1880.

The American Bible Revision Committee have completed the revision of the English Version of their New Testament and transmitted the result of their labors to England. The British committee will meet in November for final action, and the University presses of Oxford and Cambridge are expected to issue the revised New Testament in February, 1881. The Old Testament will be published two or three years after.

The American Revisers have given their time and labor for eight years without compensation. The necessary expenses have been provided for by voluntary subscriptions.

Any friend of the great undertaking who will contribute towards the expenses ten dollars or more before February next, will receive a memorial copy of the first University edition of the revised New Testament, handsomely bound and inscribed. The money must be sent to the President (Rev. Dr. Schaff) or Treasurer (Mr. Andrews L. Taylor) in the "Bible House, New York."

AUTUMN SUNDAY.

It is said that flowers emit the sweetest fragrance before a storm; but they look their prettiest after a storm. What is lovelier and prettier in nature than an autumn Sunday morning after a rain—the woods are fair and fragrant—the forest leaves many colored, and just frost enough in the air to make overcoat and shawl feel pleasant, thrown loosely over the shoulders. The Church in the country is the cheerful centre, approached by gentle, sober people from every direction, and in many places still in North Carolina, they ride from five to ten miles to Church on Sunday. The piano is silent—parlor closed—house and all about it rests in silence—the fair young maiden, the sweet unselfish tender hearted matron, in lovely autumn robes and smiling face, ride, drive or walk to Church, and air their bodies and souls, among neighbors still disposed to go up to the place of prayer on the Lord's day. A sunrise is over the whole community assembled in the temple, and the minister begins the service with invoking the blessing of the Father above and the people raise their voices to express the deep emotions of their hearts. How appropriate the words of the Saviour on such an occasion: "I am the light of the world." The minister finds the exposition a pleasure and preaches to attentive hearers until his heart almost leaps from his body and tears run down his cheeks. He then invites the communicants to meet around the table of the Lord and ministers bread and wine, they eat and drink in remembrance of Him who died for them, renew vows of fellowship, sing a hymn, contribute an alms and go out to friendly greeting and lunching under the trees in the balmy sunshine.

Such a Sunday was the 5th Sunday in October, 1880, at Goshen Presbyterian church, Gaston county, N. C. It was communion day. Saturday before, preparation day, was rainy, cloudy and cold, but the clouds passed away Saturday evening, the pledge of a fair Sunday morning; and it was indeed one of the happiest ever spent among friends and lovers of truth and the ways of Zion. How much we owe to the integrity and conservatism of our sober country people, taught of God and kept by God from the "way of the evil man, from the man that speaketh froward things." Their conversation on an autumn Sunday is like the fresh rain, refreshing, cheering and helping you to believe "the upright shall dwell in the land and the perfect shall remain in it." A Deacon, if he is thoughtful, can do much work in his line on such days, and the colportage committee of Mecklenburg Presbytery, I am glad to know, are trying to distribute good books by this agency in our congregations. Let us love and keep our Sabbaths. How different they are yet from the Sundays described in the last N. C. PRESBYTERIAN by a visitor to Germany. R. Z. J.

CENTRAL UNIVERSITY, RICHMOND, KY.

In your last issue, Mr. Editor, is a brief account of the late meeting of the Synod of Kentucky in which the discussion of Secular Education was prominent. This suggests the idea of saying to your readers that the leading enterprise of our Church in this State now is our institution of learning. We think that owing to our geographical position as a border state it is a vital question. The Presbyterians of Kentucky were the pioneers of education in the western country. Before Kentucky was a state they had founded an institution of learning which was located at Lexington and which flourished for a time, but by an unfortunate connection with the State they lost it about the beginning of the present century. Nothing daunted, however, by their misfortune, they rallied again and immediately undertook to establish a college of their own which after years of labor they succeeded in doing. This institution was Center College at Danville, whose influence for good was felt through all the West and Southwest until the beginning of the late civil war. At the close of this terrible strife the majority of those who had control of the college were in sympathy with the Northern party in the Church, and although the whole number of Presbyterians in the State adhere to the Northern Assembly were in a small minority, they claimed and held the college. After years of fruitless effort at compromise, and still more fruitless litigation the Synod yielded to the inevitable, and again true to her people set about establishing another institution.

In 1872 the present enterprise was begun under the head of Drs. R. L. Breck, S. Robinson, W. F. Junkin, and others. In less than a year a sufficient amount of money was subscribed to start with and Central University was located at Richmond, Ky., a splendid college edifice with professors houses erected, and with a faculty distinguished for ability and learning. The institution was opened in the fall of 1874. Our new vessel was launched on stormy seas. In a border State—in the face of an opposing ecclesiastical money power—and in the midst of a universal financial crash. All honor is due the able chancellor Rev. R. L. Breck, D. D., and his faithful helpers, the boards of curators and trustees, for the conduct of the enterprise through such adverse times. For a year past it seemed that it would be impossible to sustain the institution. The excellent chancellor himself thought the wisest course would be to suspend for an indefinite period and thus allow the endowment fund to accumulate. The curators, however, thought best to cut down the current expenses and continue to run the institution, fearing that suspension would event in final death. Dr. Breck unwilling to recede from the high ground upon which it had been commenced, resigned the chancellorship and thereby his valuable services are lost. Rev. L. H. Blanton, D. D., was chosen to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Dr. Breck and seems to be the very man for the place, and although there are trials to come and much hard work to do, every one appears hopeful of ultimate success. But pardon me. I had no thought of running to such a length with these details when I began. But if this "dark and bloody ground" conflict does not interest your readers they must excuse our weakness in reciting it to them. We are in the forefront of the battle here and feel the pressing necessity of fortifying this point. We are compelled to do it or surrender, and we ask your sympathy and prayers. We are aware of the fact that our sins of omission are many, as a Church, but we challenge the world to show us a people on this American continent that have done more or better work in the cause of education that the Presbyterians of Kentucky. They have always felt that it was the only way they could sustain themselves and serve the Church as they should, and with God's blessing on their efforts have succeeded. You will perceive then, that this work of establishing "Central University" is not a new conception—a venture to be abandoned on account of a few discouragements—but a carrying out on the part of the sons of that which has been committed to them by noble sires, and we hope these children will prove themselves worthy of their names. North Carolin Medical Journal for October: We are struck with a case reported by Dr. Staton of Tarborough, of "gastrotomy or gastrostomy" (the latter we take to be the correct word) in this number. A negro had swallowed condensed lye by mistake, resulting in almost complete closure of the gullet, so that no food or fluids could pass into the stomach. Starvation was imminent, as the patient was not at all nourished by the artificial means resorted to. At last Dr. Staton made a permanent opening through the abdomen into the stomach, inserting a hard rubber plug. Through this, at last accounts, the patient was being nourished, and his life saved. The article is illustrated with two engravings.

The Journal contains original work in large proportion, and shows painstaking labor on the part of the editors.

We would suggest that the Journal would appear fresher at least if it appeared earlier in the month.

From the Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia, Pa., we have received

1. The Chinese Slave-Girl: A story of Woman's Life in China. By Rev. J. A. Devis, formerly of Amoy, China. 1880. pp. 333.

The object of this story is to give a fair view of woman's life among the lower and middle classes in Southern China. Its chief incidents are stated to be actual occurrences, and several of its characters were personally known to the author.

2. The House that Jack Built: By Kate W. Hamilton, author of "We three," &c. 1880. pp. 368.

"Jackqueline" is a girl, early left in charge of younger children. The book gives a history of her diligence and zeal in supporting them; the sad mistake she made about the temperance problem; the resulting sorrow and the rescue by divine grace. Many good points are made and well enforced; but some of the incidents are rather overdrawn.

3. Elijah, the Favored Man: A Life and its Lessons for to-day. By Robt. M. Patterson, D. D., author of "Paradise," "Visions of Heaven," &c.

Religion and Chemistry. By Josiah Parsons Cooke, Erving Professor of Chemistry and Mineralogy in Harvard University, 1880, $1.50, Chas. Scribner's Sons, New York.

This is a newly revised edition of an important work, which has long been out of print. Its author has wrought it out after large experience, and in view of the discovery of new facts, and changes in scientific theories. Its basis is his popular lectures, delivered before the Brooklyn Institute on Sunday evenings; and its chief aim is to show that there is abundant evidence of design in the properties of the chemical elements alone, and hence that the great argument of Natural Theology rests upon a basis, which no theories of organic development—like Darwin's—can shake. It opens a new and interesting field of Christian evidence from physical science.

From Houghton, Mifflin & Co., successors to Houghton, Osgood & Co., Boston, Mass.

1. Boston Monday Lectures: Labor with Preludes on Current Events. By Joseph Cook. 1880. $1.50.

2. Boston Monday Lectures: Socialism with Preludes on Current Events. By Jos. Cook. 1880. $1.50.

These books deal with important issues in working and social and political life, such as Infidel Attacks on Property, and on the Mails, Trades' Unions, Co-operative Savings Banks, Polygamy, Jesuit Text Books, for Americans, &c. They are handled with Mr. Cooks well known vigor, laborious research, originality, good sense and pronounced opinions. Everywhere rises to view his sublime admiration of Boston as the "ne plus ultra," in every way. Professedly and indeed largely on a non-political and non-sectional platform. Yet his impartiality wears a Republican complexion and the South gets blows. But we like the books, they are downright and upright, and do not straddle fences. We do not need to agree to all in books to find them refreshing and a power for good, as these are.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

PRESBYTERIAN (SOUTH).

A correspondent of the Central Presbyterian writes from Louisburg, Tenn., that the church is greatly revived. Dr. J. W. Hoyte preached from the 14th to the 24th ult. Seventeen were added to the church, three by letter, fourteen by profession, and two to the Methodists. | Rev. Mr. Moffett is expected there soon, and he will find a revived church to welcome him.

At a called meeting of the Presbytery of South Alabama, Oct. 12th and 13th. Mr. Julius P. Ward was licensed to preach the gospel, and Mr. John C. Duncan was enrolled as a licentiate after the usual examination. Mr. D. presented a certificate from the St. Louis Association of Congregationalists.

Rev. J. M. Evans assisted Rev. J. K. Hitner at a meeting of a week's continuance in Beard church West Lexington Presbytery. Five persons united with the church and others will do so. It is expected that a new church will be erected shortly.

Rev. L. B. Johnson's postoffice address is changed from North Side, Goochland county, to Gordonsville, Va.

Rev. A. R. Kennedy remains pastor of the churches at Augusta and Cotton Plant, Ark. The Presbytery of Arkansas has refused to put the call from the church at Maysville, Ky., into his hands.

Rev. J. B. Buchanan writes to the Texas Presbyterian:

I have not located yet—I am looking for churches. The Presbyterians are too weak in this section to support a minister. I have been in Texas eighteen days, and have preached nearly two weeks. My congregations have been uniformly large and attentive. I should remain right here if I could be supported. My postoffice, at present, is Livingston, Polk county, Texas. I hope I can attend Presbytery at Longview.

The Committee of Central Texas Presbytery on the Assembly's minutes with reference to the overture from Orange Presbytery for a burial service reported as follows:

Your committee would recommend the discountenancing of this movement by the Presbytery, for the following reasons:—

1. Because our hymn book is sufficiently encumbered by the supplement.
2. Because such a movement is contrary to the time-honored custom of our church, and, if adopted, might prove an entering wedge to a future liturgy.
3. Because the Bible furnishes numerous passages eminently adapted to funeral occasions.

It is further recommended, that, should the Presbytery take this action, the same be communicated to the Committee on the Revision of the Directory of Worship, with the statement that we do not wish a "burial service" to have a place in our "Directory of Worship."

METHODIST.

A special canvass for Syracuse University, N. Y., has realized about $14,000.

The California Methodist Conference contains American, German, Swedish and Chinese churches.

Two Methodist ministers recently left that Church to enter the Congregational Church.

BAPTIST.

In 1790 there were 1,260 Baptists of all shades in Pennsylvania, one Baptist to every 344 of the population. Now there are 64,000 Baptists, being one to every sixty-six of the population.

The First Baptist church, San Francisco, Cal., is breaking down under a debt which is greater than the value of its real estate, and will probably go into bankruptcy.—Presbyterian.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Congregationalism is growing in Missouri. Additions 600 to 700—an increase of 200 over the growth of the previous year.

Chicago Theological Seminary has received the $50,000 from the Stone estate in Malden, Mass., to endow the professorship filled by Rev. Dr. Willcox.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

The late General Convention of the Episcopal church declined a canon forbidding sale of pews, as the church is not yet prepared for it.

ELECTICISMS.

SOUND ADVICE.

Methodist Recorder.

An idea prevalent among many young people is, that it is beneath their dignity to engage in useful employment, especially if it be of an humble character. They think that fine dress, fine looks, and idleness, will give them position and influence in society. Of what use are these walking fashion-plates, these white-fingered lovers of ease to the world? They may look nicely, but is it not not much better to be useful, to know that we are doing good to some one than to be admired simply for good looks?—Never shun humble employment, no matter of what kind; take hold of it bravely and have the consciousness of doing your part in the busy world. Live for usefulness, not for show.

THE FUTURE.

S. C. Advocate.

The future brightens. The present is big with coming events. Never before in the history of the Church was there so much doing for the conversion of the heathen as now. Less than forty years ago there were three native Protestant Christians in China. Now there are between twelve and fifteen thousand. The gates of all the heathen world are open to missionary enterprise. More has been done for missions the last eighty years than in five hundred years before. Let the Church get in full sympathy with Christ.

A WITNESSING CHURCH.

Central Presbyterian.

It has been often said that the Presbyterian Church is a Witnessing Church. Its cardinal function is to define, defend, and maintain the truth, without compromises of any sort. If that truth is not palatable to the world, if, in other words, the maintenance of such an attitude is not popular, it makes no difference.—The Church itself, wherever it be, is but an Election from the masses of population, and has always, in conformity with God's plans, been in a small minority as compared with the great host of the unbelievers. It is easy at any time to increase its apparent strength and worldly prosperity by lowering the conditions of salvation. God might have caused it to overflow the world, and to gather in its folds all the myriads of humanity, but He has seen fit to suffer it to go on toiling and fighting for these eighteen hundred years, and suffers it to stand fighting to-day, girdled by a circle of fire.

A FAITHFUL FEW.

Presbyterian:

There are a few in every parish who are willing to work and do work. You hear of them among the poor and sick: you find them in the prayer-meeting and see them in all church activities. They are always willing to do more than their part. You can rely upon them every time. But the majority of professors seem surprised that you should expect any work from them. They come into chu ch to enjoy religion, not to h-lp others—to be saved, not to work.

THE WAY TO LIVE

Church and Home:

We know one man who lives constantly in an atmosphere of what might be called a personal revival of religion. He is always on the lookout to find some one who may be turned to the Lord. And when found, the subjects of his labor are very apt to turn. He reasons, persuades, prays and prevails. They decide for Christ, and decide once for all.

The "old grocer" who has the new store and new goods, who hails from No. 11 North Front street—John L. Boatwright, to avoid further explanation—certainly keeps the choicest quality of groceries. For further particulars we refer to the chief of our Home Department.

SECULAR MISCELLANY.

Good temper is like a sunny day; it sheds a brightness over everything; it is the sweetener of toil and the soother of disquietude.

As many as 850 Mongolians left San Francisco a fortnight ago on the City of Peking for the Flowery Kingdom. The causes of this unexpected exodus are not clear.

Governor Wright, of the Indian Territory, is a converted Choctaw Indian. Sometimes after presiding over a political meeting of his people he calls them to order and preaches a sermon to them.

The Irishman had a correct appreciation of the fitness of things who, being asked by the judge when he applied for a license to sell whiskey if he was of good moral character, replied: "Faith, yer honour, I don't see the necessity of a good moral character to sell whiskey!"

Messrs. W. T. Blackwell & Co, of Durham, are sinking an artesian well on their premises to supply their works with water. If the enterprise is successful they will construct one sufficiently large to supply the town of Durham. —Raleigh Star.

The Newbern Wood Plate Factory is a decided success, and furnishes nearly all the stamped circular wood plates that are used by the grocers in the entire Union. Over fifty thousand plates are made and shipped to New York each day. This enterprise gives employment to about one hundred operatives and laborers, giving a support to several hundred people. Other industrial enterprises are at work, and Newbern is feeling the good effects of the steady employment and wages paid to operatives and laborers.—Geo. Allen in Newbernian.

Judge Seymour, when in the Legislature, drew the law which was passed preventing the sale of liquor on election days. It is one of the best, if not the best law ever enacted by our Legislature.—Charlotte Democrat.

Baltimore, Md., does an immense business in the canned goods line. About eighty firms have their headquarters in that city, with an aggregate capital of $7,000,000. The trade requires nearly 2,500 coasting vessels, upon which over 10,000 hands are employed.

"I shall find another channel for my article," wrote the author of a rejected contribution. "That's right," was the answer of the courteous editor; "the British Channel would be an excellent place for it."

The Presbyterian gives this concerning the apple crop:

Nearly every vessel leaving the port of New York carries a consignment of apples. Boston, also, has had a larger export trade in apples at this season than in any other year. For the five weeks ending October 2d there were shipped from New York, Boston and Montreal, 192,625 barrels, almost double that of the corresponding period in any previous year. The larger portion of the apples sent abroad is for the Liverpool market; Glasgow ranks next; while London takes third place in amount of consumption. France and Germany import but few. Those brands which find the readiest sale abroad are the Newtown Pippins, the Spitzbergs, and the Baldwins. The western counties of New York have contributed to the general supply to an especially large extent, particularly those of Niagara and Wayne. The crop in Columbia county alone is estimated at 500,000 barrels, but large as it is, the yields in other counties equal it.

AN ONLY DAUGHTER CURED OF CONSUMPTION.

When death was hourly expected, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting with the many herbs of Calcutta, he accidentally made a preparation which cured his only child of Consumption. His child is now in this country and enjoying the best of health. He has proved to the world that Consumption can be positively and permanently cured. The Doctor now gives this Recipe free, only asking two green stamps to pay expenses. This Herb also cures night-sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold up in twenty-four hours. Address CRADDOCK & CO., 1032 Race St., Philadelphia, naming this paper.

The habit of running over boots and shoes corrected with Lyon's Patent Heel Stiffeners.

There is no excuse for those who drag their weary and disordered bodies into our company, when a few doses of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA would cleanse their murky blood and restore their health and vigor. Ye muddy victims of billous disease, have some regard for your neighbors, if not for yourselves.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. CHARLES B. WILSON died October 15th, 1880. But few men spend their whole lives so devotedly to the service of God. A cripple and a confirmed invalid for more than thirty years, he was truly a great sufferer.

His individual accountability to the Master was, during his three score years and ten, never lost sight of, and in all his afflictions he was ready to say with Jacob, "though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him." His chief aim in life was, indeed, to glorify God and live in His presence forever.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

At a meeting of the Session of Providence church, Mecklenburg county, N. C., on Sabbath morning, October 24th, 1880, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, God in His most holy and wise providence, hath removed from the church militant to the church triumphant, our beloved brother and co-presbyter, WILLIAM REA, who had been a member of this Session about fifty years—in view of the loss that we, the Session of Providence church, and the church of which he was a member, and the community in which he lived have sustained, therefore be it

Resolved, 1. That while we mourn the death of this venerable Christian patriarch, we thank God for his long, godly life, for the legacy of his earnest prayers, for his devout attachment to the doctrines of our church and for the assurance that he has entered upon the rest that remains for the people of God.

2d. That we sympathize with his family to the third generation in the loss of the venerated head and branch of their household.

3d. That in testimony of our sorrow for this deceased father in Israel, we spread these resolutions upon the minutes of Session.

4th. That a copy of these resolutions be furnished his family, also the Christian Observer and N C. PRESBYTERIAN for publication.

By order of Session.

Clerk of Session.

Near Statesville, N. C., Mrs. EMMA, wife of Thos. M. C. Davidson, Esq., on the evening of the 17th of September, 1880.

She had been unwell, but her friends and physican apprehended nothing serious After eating her supper, she observed that she was about to faint. The usual remedies of relief, by kind hands, were at once applied. Her husband, just returning from his work, was alarmed and hastened to his wife to find she had ceased to breathe. Thus by some sudden affection (paralysis) of the heart she was called away. Called away without any painful death struggle at the very threshold of life's prime. She had completed her 31st year on the 8th inst. A short life, yet long enough to make a full bright record, adorning with the beauty of Godliness the relation of daughter, sister, wife and mother. She left four little children.

Mrs Davidson was the daughter of the late Rev. Jas. Purvis, of the N. C. Conference and Mrs. E. J. W. Purvis, surviving mother. Piously reared, she remembered not the time she did not love and trust her Saviour. At the age of 15 she professed her faith in the Methodist Church. Was graduated at the Anson Female College 1868 June 24th, 1873, she was married to T. M. C. Davidson, Esq

With unchanged love for the Church of her fathers she felt called in the providence of God to fellowship with her husband and transfer her membership to the A. R. P. Church in Statesville, where she greatly endeared herself to pastor and brethren by her warm Christian devotion.

W. B. P., HER PASTOR.

NASAL CATARRH!

All cases promptly and permanently cured by

Dr. S. W. BEALL,

Homeopathic Catarrhal Specialist,

A reputable Physician of 30 years' practice.

Not a Douche, Not an Inhaler, Not a Snuff.

Chronic Nasal Catarrh has never been cured by local treatment alone. Catarrh being constitutional requires constitutional treatment to eradicate it from the system.

In connection with Dr. Beall's Nasal Catarrh Specific, a course of treatment is furnished each patient as indicated by the symptoms. Also an Atomizer with cleansing solutions to be locally applied in the form of a spray. Patients at a distance treated by the aid of a carefully prepared diagnostic sheet. No single box or bottle of medicine is applicable to all cases.

Dr. Beall has cured hundreds of cases in the worst form, and patients now being treated in all parts of the United States report rapid improvement. Treatment is pleasant and directions easily followed.

The following is a specimen of the testimonials constantly being received:

To the Public—Statement of A. W. Ensey, of the firm of Ensey & Harter, Troy, Ohio.

For a number of years I was afflicted with Nasal Catarrh, affecting seriously both my head and throat. The discharges from the nose were streaked with blood, and had a very offensive smell. After a course of treatment from Dr. Beall, I am entirely cured.

FOR THE FAMILY.

Coming Back.

They say if our beloved dead
Should seek the old familiar place,
Some stranger would be there instead,
And they would find no welcome face.

I cannot tell how it may be
In other homes, but this I know—
Could my lost darling come to me,
That she would never find it so.

Oft-times the flowers have come and gone
Oft-times the winter winds have blown,
The while her peaceful rest went on,
And I have learned to live alone—

Have slowly learned from day to day
In all life's tasks to bear my part;
But whether grave or whether gay,
I hide her memory in my heart.

Fond, faithful love has blessed my way,
And friends are round me true and tried;
They have their place, but hers to-day
Is empty as the day she died.

How would I spring with bated breath,
And joy too deep for word or sign,
To take my darling home from death,
And once again to call her mine!

I dare not dream the blissful dream;
It fills my heart with will unrest;
Where yonder cold, white marbles gleam
She still must slumber. God knows best.

– Primitive Methodist, London.

A SWEET BRIER-ROSE.

E. C WYETH.

Once upon a time there was a young girl whose name was Fatima. The home folks called her by her pet name, Fay. This young girl was fair of face, graceful in manner and carriage, and, which is better than either, was possessed of a good temper. It was not strange that her parents doted on her, her companions enjoyed her society, and her social inferiors admired her. Being an only daughter, Fay was queen of the family circle of six brothers who could see no fault or blemish in their darling sister, excepting Phil, the brother to whom she was dearest of all. He could perceive and perceived it with a pang, a defect that marred the beauty and completeness of an otherwise lovely character. He noticed it first when his sister was but a child in years, and was asked by their father to leave a pretty toy with which she was amusing herself for a few moments, and render him some trivial service which would have occupied but a small portion of her time, had she chosen to render the service. But Fay had answered, smilingly to be sure, yet selfishly:

"O papa, this is too cunning to leave. Please call Donald or Phil. They are just in the next room."

And again, a few days later, when her mother called upon Fay to post a letter for her, the little maiden answered:

"Please, mamma, the postman will be around presently. Can't you give it to him as well?"

Phil was studying his geometry lesson, and was busily employed in drawing lines and angles, and in computing distances, but he laid down his dividers, and took the letter without a word.

"What a good boy you are, Phil," laughed Fay, as her brother returned to his work. "You don't mind being bothered; but I can't endure to be disturbed when I'm occupied with an interesting story."

"Aren't you afraid of becoming just a little bit selfish, Pet?" asked Phil, as he stooped and kissed the sunny-tressed brow of his beloved sister.

Fay smiled.

"Are you afraid?" she asked in reply.

"I don't know," said Phil. "I couldn't bear to think that my precious little sister was growing up to be a selfish girl, and yet sometimes I fancy she prizes her own ease and pleasure beyond that of any others. It would have pleased mother if you had taken her letter just now. It pleased you rather to go on with your story, so you went on."

"Oh, but Phil," cried Fay, "you took the letter. Mamma didn't care who took it, just so it got off in time."

"Perhaps," said Phil. "But I cannot help thinking that mother is better pleased when the child she requests to serve her does so willingly, than when she hesitates or shows a distaste for the service. It seems to me that we ought cheerfully to serve one who is so tireless in her labor for us."

"That is true enough, Phil," returned Fay, with a pretty blush, "and I ought—only somehow, I don't think."

And as months passed into years Fay's habit of not thinking only took firmer hold. She "didn't think" when Aunt Bascom, who was quite lame and feeble, begged her to take a message to her son at the other end of the village, and because of her thoughtlessness Fay failed to carry the message, and in consequence Aunt Bascom's son, a busy man tied to his shop all day, did not learn that his mother was in need of a man to split her wood and fill her shed with fuel; and poor aunty was forced to hobble about the yard on her crutch and gather up chips for her baking, until, finding a more thoughtful passer-by, she sent the message that for two days she had supposed was carried by Fatima.

Neither had Fay any better excuse for leaving poor Florence Merrill waiting in the Library Hall all one Saturday morning, for her to bring back the book that she had had out for two weeks, and that she had promised to return on this particular Saturday morning to the library, so that Florence, who greatly desired the volume, might take it at once, as soon as it should be rechecked.

"Oh, how sorry I am!" she exclaimed, as the dinner-bell aroused her from the reverie into which she had fallen, after closing the volume over which she had been dawdling at odd moments for the past fortnight. "I promised to take this book back this morning, so that Florence could have it before she left town. I 'didn't think' that she had to take the noon accommodation train on Saturdays. Now, some one else will get it, and poor Floy will be so vexed."

It was the same excuse that she had to offer, when, after promising Nelly Gage, the little blind girl who lived next door, to read to her one hour each Wednesday afternoon, she engaged to take her music lesson at that precise hour.

"I didn't think, when I agreed to have the music lesson at that time, that there was really no other afternoon in which Nelly could have visitors. What a pity!"

And then Phil, the careful, loving brother, who was not blind to his little sister's faults, ventured to say, "Fay, dear, won't you please put this habit of yours, that you are often deploring, into plain terms?"

"Thoughtlessness?" asked Fay, with a smile and a blush, glancing up at her brother's grave eyes.

"And now, please, will my little sister consider this word, in the light of all the deplorable consequences of her own undesirable habit, and interpret its true meaning?"

'Thoughtlessness means—"

Fay's cheeks blushed rosy red, and her bright blue eyes filled with tears, as she turned away, resolved that she would at least find out Phil's meaning. She went into her own room and sat down by her open window. A sweet-brier rose clambered all over the casement. It was in full bloom, and its delicate fragrance filled the air.

"There," exclaimed Fay, "how many times I have promised to take a root of this rose to Grandma Beverly, and have always failed to think of it at the proper time of the year. And now grandma is dead and gone. I wonder if up there in the glad heaven she remembers how thoughtless—yes, I will interpret it as dear Phil has seen it—how selfish I have been.

"Thoughtless," repeated Fay, slowly and sorrowfully. "Yes, thoughtless of everything but myself, my own will and wish and way. Ah me, I am a very selfish girl, thus to have thought only of my own comfort and happiness, and to have failed so utterly to think of my bounden duty to others.

"Can it be that my dear friends know me as surely as dear Phil does, for a selfish, self-satisfied girl?"

Fay's tears streamed over her cheeks and fell upon the pink petals of the sweet-brier rose.

"Poor rose," murmured Fay, "you seem to be my sweet reproachful monitor. You shall be so still. Surely your fragrant breath shall remind me of my neglect, and of my duty. By God's help I will conquer my enemy. I will live no longer thoughtful only of myself. God forgive me for my life of selfish thoughtlessness."

Time proved the sincerity of Fay's repentance, and when another spring called into life the early buds, bending over the low mound above Grandma Beverly's grave, as her careful fingers planted the tender rootlets of a sweet-brier rose, Fay lifted her sweet eyes to Phil, who stood beside her, and saw in his look of fond pride that cheered her heart, as her dear brother said, in tones that conveyed more meaning than words alone, "The dearest flower in all the world to me must always be a sweet brier rose."—Christian Weekly.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Sketches of Famous Persons

The Emperor William, bluff, keen-eyed, frank of speech, but genial. With him, were Von Moltke, thin, gaunt, wrinkled, knowing how to be silent in seven languages, and the rugged Bismarck, looking more like a soldier than a statesman.... I was presented to the Emperor Nicholas on a boat in the Danube. He is tall, of the Jewish type of face, soldierly in bearing, bluff even to rudeness.—Archibald Forbes.

SAINTE BUEVE.

He was of a loving disposition; but his ugliness—a species of ugliness, too, which especially repels women—prevented his reaping in due form the reciprocation so necessary to almost all hearts. He was small, and wizen-faced. His head was pyramidical, like that of Thersites, the famous ugly man of Homer. His brow was broad and receding. His eyes were blue, globular, and round as that of an ox. His cheek-bones were prominent as those of an Indian, and his cheeks displayed two small spots that looked like abrasions. It is impossible to conceive how a man so ill-favored could dream continually of female conquests.—Maurice Mauris.

THEOPHILE GAUTIER.

A desk is religiously preserved in the town school at Tarbes, before which tourists stands in admiration as soon as they hear that upon it Theophile leaned to learn his first lesson. Theophile hearing the story, resolved to form the acquaintance of this desk. He went to Tarbes, presented himself incognito to the principal of the school, and announcing himself as an enthusiastic admirer of Gautier's writings, begged to see the desk. "It was assuredly the first time," Gautier said afterward, "that I and it had ever been face to face with each other; but still, though it was not my desk, it might easily have been. I sat down on the bench which belonged to it, and which, if fate had so willed, would have been my bench. Having placed myself in the attitude of a studious scholar, I tried to imagine myself as once again in my own proper position. The principal seeing me thus absorbed, could not restrain a smile softened by emotion; he showed me on the desk sundry scratches and cuts made by Theophile in class, procuring for him no doubt, many a punishment.... A Philistine would have taken a foolish pleasure in robbing the good man of his illusions. I quitted without revealing who I really was, and told no one there of my visit."—French Men of Letters.

A GREAT SCENE.

At Sedan the Emperor William sat on a hill overlooking the battle-field, with the American Generals Sheridan and Forsyth, when the news of the capitulation came, and the French bearer of the flag of truce was seen riding sadly back. At dawn the next morning Bismarck, who had been drinking champagne and eating sandwiches with officers and myself until one, and arguing terms of surrender the rest of the night, was mounted on his bay, fresh and clean-shaven, riding toward Sedan, while we followed. A shabby low carriage, from which came the gleam of gold lace approached. Bismarck sprang from his horse, letting it go, and bowed low. The leaden-colored, gaunt-eyed, deep-lined man with dishevelled mustache, in the carriage was Napoleon III. Alighting at a weaver's cottage, Napoleon and Bismarck sat down and talked in an undertone, while we stood at the garden edge, the weaver calmly looked on from his window, and the eager troops and provision carts streamed by. Then Bismarck rode back to the Emperor, and Napoleon waited alone, walking back and forth, limping slightly and smoking countless cigarettes. The proudest monarch in Europe was cooling his heels at a weaver's cottage, waiting in attendance on a Prussian. Soon a troop of cuirassiers formed around the cottage, Bismarck returned, and Napoleon was escorted to a ruined house in Sedan. Von Moltke had dispelled the obstinacy of the French commander by showing him the German cannon, and the capitulation had been signed. The German monarch came riding down with head proudly erect to meet the bent and broken Napoleon, who came forward with handkerchief at his eyes, while William's face worked strangely. In the shattered house and interview of twenty minutes was held, then William rode away among the troops, and Napoleon spent the night in the bedroom occupied by William the night before. He passed his time in reading, and the book significantly was Bulwer's "Last of the Barons."—Archibald Forbes.

The Cultivation of the Sumac.

There are thousands of people who wander through the woods in autumn picking the beautiful scarlet and yellow leaves of the sumac bush to decorate their rooms, without knowing that there is any other use for the plant. Yet the importation of the sumac into this country this year will amount to about 11,000 tons, costing about $1,100,000. The leaves of the sumac, dried and ground, are largely used in tanning and dyeing, and in Sicily and other parts of Italy the plant is carefully cultivated and treated. In view of the fact that the American sumac contains from 6 to 8 per cent more tannic acid than the Italian, and remembering that the plant grows wild in profusion throughout this country, it seems reasonable to believe that it might be made a very profitable crop. At the present time the amount of native sumac brought into market does not exceed about 8,000 tons yearly, and its market price is only $50 per ton, just half the price of the Italian product.—This large difference in the market value of the foreign and the domestic article is due to the fact that the American sumac, as at present prepared, is not suitable for making the finer white leathers so much used for gloves and fancy shoes, owing to its giving a disagreeable yellow or dirty color. The many attempts that have been made to avoid this difficulty by care in collecting and grinding the leaves have not resulted in success, and it has long been supposed that this objectionable quality was inherent in the American plant; but Mr. Wm. McMurtrie, in a report to the United States Commissioner of Agriculture, shows that this difficulty can be surmounted and the American product made even superior to the foreign.

Mr. McMurtrie made a number of tests to learn the relative amounts of tannic acid found in the leaves at different periods of their development, and while the amount was found to be greatest in the leaves gathered in July, he found that those gathered in full development in June were even then more than equal to the best foreign leaves in this respect. But further, he found that the deleterious coloring matter (due to the presence of quercitrin and quercetin) was not yet developed, and that therefore the American leaves gathered in June were superior to the Italian for all purposes.—The importance of this discovery may be seen by the fact that the cultivation of the plant may be carried on most profitably in this country as soon as manufacturers and dealers recognize the improvement thus obtained in the domestic article, and by classifying it according to its percentage of tannic acid and its relative freedom from coloring matter, advance the price of that which is early picked and carefully treated.

In Italy the sumac is planted in shoots in the spring in rows, and is cultivated in the same way and to about the same extent as corn. It gives a crop the second year after setting out, and regularly thereafter. The sumac gathered in this country is taken mostly from wild plants growing on waste land, but there is no reason why it should not be utilized and cultivated on land not valuable for other crops.

Why the Glow-Worms Glow.

The French scientist Jousset de Liellesme claims to have discovered that the glow of the glow-worm is a spontaneous action, and that the little insect has the same object in glowing that some Parisian ladies have in displaying certain ribbon streamers, which are very appropriately called "excitez-moi." It has long been known that the female glow-worm alone understands the art of glowing exceedingly well, though the male and even the larva possess some of this phosphorescence. Some earlier scientists expressed their belief that the glowing apparatus in the female served the purpose of favoring the fructification of the eggs, in so far as the male was attracted from the distance by the phosphorescent light of the female. But it was left to our prosaic age to discover that the light was produced by an essentially spontaneous action.

The above named French naturalist made an incision in the head of the female glow-worm (evidently supposing that in this animal, also, the organ of will is in the head), and the phosphorescent light at once ceased, but it returned—and this is the most important fact of the experiment—every time that the action of the brain or of the central nervous organ was irritated by artificial means, such as electricity.—Scientific American.

"The Mad Poet."

Such was the name given to McDonald Clark, a wild, eccentric writer of verses, who lived in the city of New York some thirty years ago. He had a talent for improvisation, which he used to celebrate the charms of those persons of whom, from time to time, he became enamored.

A volume of his poems, published by subscription, contains in the preface these touching paragraphs:

"I won't pester folks with apologies. Here's a round handful of flowers,—a little dirt about the roots,—a tear'll wash it off!

"If the life of my poetry is wholesome, 'twill breathe after the wild spirit that inspired it has been sobered at the terrible tribunal of eternity, and the weak hand that traced it has long wasted to ashes."

In one of these wild modes which frequently came upon him, when the will to be sublime was not sustained by the strength, he wrote these lines on Washington:

Eternity,—give him elbowroom;
A spirit like his is large;
Earth,—fence with artillery his tomb,
And fire a double charge
To the memory of America's greatest man;
Match him, posterity, if you can.

He was a regular attendant on Sunday church services, and in one of his lucid modes wrote this tender, simple tribute to the Sabbath:

I feel the happier all the week,
If my foot has pressed the sacred aisle,
The pillow seems softer to my cheek;
I sink to slumber with a smile;
With sinful passions cease to fight,
And sweetly dream on Suandy night.

He died in the lunatic asylum on Blackwell's Island, and was buried in Greenwood cemetery. Speaking of the arrangements he desired made for his funeral he said, "I hope the children will come. I want to be buried by the side of children. Four things I am sure there will be in heaven—music, flowers, pure air and plenty of little children."—Youths Companion.

A Word to Our Readers.

When you read of a remedy that will cure all diseases beware of it; but when you read of a pure vegetable compound which claims to cure only certain parts of the body, and furnishes high proof that it does this, you can safely try it and with the assurance that it will help you. This is just what Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure does. It cures all troubles of the lower portion of the body and none others. It will not help the toothache, ear-ache nor consumption but it will put your body in a vigorous and healthy state where you can enjoy life and appreciate its good things. Try it.

Cathartic Pills
Combine the choicest cathartic principles in medicine, in proportions accurately adjusted to secure activity, certainty, and uniformity of effect. They are the result of years of careful study and practical experiment, and are the most effectual remedy yet discovered for diseases caused by derangement of the stomach, liver, and bowels, which require prompt and effectual treatment. AYER'S PILLS are specially applicable to this class of diseases. They act directly on the digestive and assimilative processes, and restore regular healthy action. Their extensive use by physicians in their practice, and by all civilized nations, is one of the many proofs of their value as a safe, sure, and perfectly reliable purgative medicine. Being compounded of the concentrated virtues of purely vegetable substances, they are positively free from calomel or any injurious properties, and can be administered to children with perfect safety.

AYER'S PILLS are an effectual cure for Constipation or Costiveness, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, Foul Stomach and Breath, Dizziness, Headache, Loss of Memory, Numbness, Biliousness, Jaundice, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Dropsy, Tumors, Worms, Neuralgia, Colic, Gripes, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Gout, Piles, Disorders of the Liver, and all other diseases resulting from a disordered state of the digestive apparatus.

As a Dinner Pill they have no equal.

While gentle in their action, these PILLS are the most thorough and searching cathartic that can be employed, and never give pain unless the bowels are inflamed, and then their influence is healing. They stimulate the appetite and digestive organs; they operate to purify and enrich the blood, and impart renewed health and vigor to the whole system.

EXTRACTS FROM A YOUNG LADY'S LETTERS.

September 23.

I have been over Oak Hill cemetery in Georgetown. It is said to be not surpassed in beauty by Greenwood, tho' of course much smaller. The situation reminds me of Trinity Cemetery in New York. On the side of a hill and laid off in terraces, steps leading up and down between the plats from one beautifully kept gravel walk and drive to another. At the foot of the hill rushes and glides Rock Creek which separates the two cities. At different points you catch a sight of the white dome and and spires of Washington, and in such surroundings they give rise to thoughts of another city, that "which hath foundations." At intervals you hear the sound of rushing water, which is all that breaks the silence of the place. All that art of taste and wealth can do with flowers and vines and fine forest growth to make a beautiful resting place, has been done. On the summit of a little knoll is an elegant brown stone chapel covered with ivy, and with stained glass windows. It was erected by Mr. Corcoran who seems to have a hand in everything beautiful and costly about Washington. There are many handsome monuments and mausoleum of striking design. One erected to a wife, I thought especially touching and expressive. On one side was carved a hand holding up a chain, one link of which was broken in two, the chain falling apart. What do you think of the taste of setting a photograph of the deceased in the head-stone? Or of having a head carved on it? C. and I wandered at will among the lovely walks. I hope we took in all such scenes should inspire. How assuring come the words: "I am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth on me though he were dead yet shall he live." I must tell you a mournful little story that filled my heart with pity. While we were walking, we noticed a lady in black, and heavily veiled, standing over and walking round a grave and placing flowers upon it. With her was a poor afflicted deformed youth supported by a servant. That youth was the poor lady's last remaining child. Her oldest son, her pride and hope a very fine young fellow, who was to have graduated at Princeton with first honors, was among those who were smitten down with that malarial fever at that college last June. C. told me the story and I thought it particularly sad.

25th. Four of us spent last Thursday at Mt. Vernon. The boat left at 10 o'clock, there were some seventy-five people on board. The Potomac is about a mile wide at Washington, and as we glided down it the scene was very charming. The grounds and buildings of the Arsenal on one bank, the stately old house of Gen. Lee, Arlington House, on the other standing back on the hills, the shining river studded with sail-boats, tugs and large steamers, the beautiful city receding in the distance, the gay groups on the deck of our boat, people laughing and chatting and exclaiming, all this made our crowd feel very happy. At Mt. Vernon soon after 11 o'clock, it was a pretty sight to see the large procession of pilgrims winding up the hill to the shrine. We all gathered reverently round Washington's tomb. We looked in at the two marble sarcophagi, while the guide chattered incessantly. Into the state dining and reception rooms, which certainly seem of small dimensions. The relics are very interesting. The marble mantel ordered from Italy by Washington, the stone model of the Bastilo made from foundation stone of the original building, the huge key of the same given by Lafayette to Washington, the old chair that came over in the May flower (only seat and frame having been renewed), the harpsichord given by Washington to Mollie Custis, all these things are venerable. Everything has to be protected from relic hunters. The bed-curtains of the bed where Washington died were carried off, bit by bit, long ago, and the fac similes which replaced them had had half the fringe tassels bitten off. Our lunch was cold ham, bread and butter and hot coffee, and we took it in an open latticed passage facing the river. Then we wandered all about, to the ice house and spring, and in the old garden with its trim box hedges and moss and dahlies, strolled over the beautiful lawn, and admired everything. A certain wildness about the place adds to its charm. There is the inimitable air of a bygone age in the old holly trees, walnut trees, and grape vines, the huge oaks and dog woods. I noticed the familiar weeds, the verbesina and vernonia and Spanish needles in the grass and the acorns all over the ground. I always have thought Mt. Vernon the loveliest place I ever saw, and I think so now more decidedly still. The situation of the house is so fine. From every point such noble views of the river and opposite shores.

After all it is a great comfort to know that Washington was a gentleman and lived like one. I couldn't feel the same reverance and enthusiasm for him if he had been named Toots, and has left a double log-cabin for us to cherish.

We stopped at Alexandria on our way home to see the old church where Washington and Lee both worshipped. We walked up several squares through the sleepy old town. The church looks its age—curious little cupola on top—narrow little windows high in the wall and covered with ivy. But the fine organ and the gas would astonish Washington. We sat in his pew, and I read the creed and then the sexton showed us round the church yard. There are many queer inscriptions on the tomb-stones. The oldest date I saw was 1771. One sketch that the deceased was from "the colony of Connecticut."

I have been over the Smithsonian and through the departments, the patent office, the observatory, &c., &c. The great telescope is 40 feet long, 30 inches in diameter. One of the largest in the world. Uncle C was perfectly happy and in his element explaining everything to us. The patent office made my head ache to think what an amount of thought people have spent on those inventions. Those seemed to me to be models of every possible machine under the sun. One for making needles was so surprisingly perfect that if you "place a bit of ore in one end a dress ready made will come out at the other end." The wings of the patent office that were burned, are already rebuilt, and are very handsome. The new State Department building is superb. Built of white granite in the French style, and facing the river. It has a front on four squares; elegantly finished inside, tiled floors, marble panels, frescoed walls. You can't form an idea of the splendor and amount of costly work exhibited on all these new buildings.

What is the reason I don't see something worth seeing from North Carolina in the Agricultural Department here? All I could find among the vast quantity of productions from all quarters, grains, weeds, grasses, stuffed birds, beasts, fishes and (wax) fruits, all there was from our old North State was some tobacco from Guilford and some medicinal roots from Statesville.

We got home about 3 o'clock in time to escape a sudden storm. It cleared up at sunset, and we saw the loveliest sight from our windows. The West was gorgeous with flame, color and gold and blue, while in the East was piled up a bank of dark gray clouds against which the capitol stood out shining white, and with one end resting on the dome a very brilliant double rainbow came out, and then gradually faded away as the West grew brighter.

28th. We all went to different churches on Sunday, some to Roman Catholic, some to Presbyterian. I have been to a Roman Catholic colored church, one of the handsomest I have seen. The singing was very fine. It was wonderful to me to hear negroes sing the Latin chants. All of us went together at night to the Episcopal Ascension church, said to be the finest in the city.

It is settled now that Uncle C. and I are to go to Philadelphia together, and I shall stop a day or so to take a look at the "fathers" of the Presbyterian church assembled there in council. Then I will have to go on to New York alone.

So this is my last letter to you from Washington. I sit at my room window to finish this. With real regret I shall leave this beautiful, beautiful city. I have had one month of perfect enjoyment here. Farewell to the broad Potomac and to the blue hills of old Virginia, to the towers of the Smithsonian, and to the dome of the capitol. The sun is setting and the river reflects the pink and gold.

Farewell to the nation's city.

A RICH MAN'S WEALTH.—WHAT SHALL HE DO WITH IT?

BY REV. CHARLES F. DEEMS, LL. D.

This question was addressed to me in a letter from a personal friend, who, I think, is going to be a very rich man, with the desire that I should answer it. My whole reply can be put in a solitary sentance: A rich man should do with his money what a poor man should do with his, namely, get the good of it.

Wealth does not always mean money. It sometimes means prosperity, happiness and well-doing. But in any sense of the term, I adhere to my answer. If the mere money were the thing in the eye of my friend when he wrote this question, my answer still holds good.

A poor man has some money, a prosperous man has more, a millionaire has exceedingly much. Now, there is one rule which should govern each. Each must consider the capabilities there are in money, and each must study to make the discovery how he can so employ these capabilities as to get the very greatest possible good out of it.

To do that, it is very plain, in the first place, that money must be used. Unused money is just as valueless as any other unused thing. A million of dollars laid away in a safe are just as useless as a million of pennies, or a million of wafers, or a million of sand-grains. In none of these cases is there growth for the future. In none of these cases is there utility for the present.

It has seemed to me that money is very much like the water in the sink-bags which a traveler carries on his journey across the desert. He may spill the whole in the sands where it can never be gathered up; or, he may send all his bags of water untouched to the place which he set out to reach. In both cases he may perish in the wilderness. There is a third thing he may do. He may use it all along, at each stage, as may be best for him, and so by exhausting his water, preserve his life. He is reduced to the alternative of doing the one or the other. If he be a prudent man he will use his water, not lavishly but discreetly, and thus get the whole good out of all that he starts with.

It is so with money, whether a man have it in small quantities or large. What good can I get out of this money? it is not a mean question. If God gives any man large wealth, it would seem to be an indication of His providence that that man should have large enjoyments. Every pleasure becoming him as a rational, responsible and immortal person he may safely take out of his money. He will not go into excesses because he has excessive riches, for that would be to get the evil there is in the money.

But no man can have lived in the world without discovering that the greatest enjoyments which a man can possibly have are not those which consist in taking care of himself, great as they are, but in what he does for others. If there were no higher motive than the purest and best self-love, a man should spend much of his time and much of his money in considering and supplying the wants of others; but he who has never done that has never known life's highest rapture. He has only known what the sleek and petted horse in his stable has enjoyed.

Men of wealth ought to take time to consider how they are to spend their money; whereas it would appear that, in a large majority of cases, the only question they consider is, how to increase their money. There is a moral responsibility connected with all possessions. A man must answer to God as well for every dollar of his money as for every minute of his time. It does not seem that the wisest way is for a man to spend all his lifetime accumulating immense estates which he intends shall go into benevolent work after his death, and then transfer the whole responsibility of the management of those estates to the shoulders of others, by a few sentences written in his will. He fails to discharge the duty of managing his money. He fails to have that most divine joy of seeing his self-sacrifice producing blessings for others.

Nor should a rich man say, "I have accumulated a very great deal of money; I will set apart enough to carry me through life; and then I will give the balance away;" and, having so said, commence to give to every beggar that comes, and simply ease his conscience by allowing others to ease him of his money. That would not be only foolish, but it would be absolutely criminal. It would be that preminm on mendicancy which so many easy, lazy people now make, with the thought that they are liberal. A man should think where each thousand dollars will do the most good, not simply in relieving the pressing immediate wants of those about him, but in opening fountains of benefactions that shall run years after he is dead. There is no blessing pronounced on the person who gives to every poor man. The Holy Scriptures say, "Blessed is he who considereth the poor," who studies their peculiar wants in order to relieve them in the best way.

I have a number of acquaintances in my circle to whom it would be easier to draw a check for a thousand dollars than to spend one hour in bending their whole intellects to the consideration of a case that already has some claim upon them. A rich man ought no more to bestow his money thoughtlessly upon what are call charities than a business man ought to bestow his money thoughtlessly upon what are called investments. When a man bestows his benefactions thus, it is, so far as he himself is concerned, as when a thirsty man has a pale of cool water thrown over him; but when he places his money thoughtfully, and knows how it is doing the best good, then he is like a thirsty man who quenches his thirst with draughts of water.

So my answer is, that a rich man must do with his wealth that which will cause him to have the good of it. The question for him to decide is, What is having the good of it? If he were merely an animal, and not a rational, mortal, responsible animal, then when he got from money what his horse gets, namely, food and grooming, he would get all the good he is capable of receiving. But a man is not a brute. He is capable of æsthetic and mortal enjoyments which the brute does not possess, and he has influence over his fellows which the brute does not exert; and it must always be in remembrance of these steadfast facts that he is to ask himself how shall he get the greatest good out of his money? Whatever any man may do with his dollars, let him remember that they are to be, to his character and destiny, either weights or wings.

GRIP.

If there is one thing, in these days of flaccid and fibreless muscle, that is wanted more than almost any other thing, it is that which is known by the name of grip.

The successful man in any business avocation, is the man who lays hold of his business with an unrelaxing grip. Commend me even in hand-shaking, not to him that daintily extends to you the tips of his digits, but to him who makes you feel the thrill of cordiality by the heartiness of his grip. This is the thing that gives value to memory and enables it to command almost measureless resources.—Every human being of mature age and moderate opportunities, has read and heard enough to be walking encyclopedia of all useful and entertaining knowledge; but the trouble is that because of the lack of tenacious grip the treasures slip away and are irrevocably lost.

So there are consciences that seem to be nerveless and flabby, and incapable of grasping moral principle; and this species of conscience was never, perhaps, more common than now.

There is such a thing, also, as a grip on the conscience; and it cannot be too distinctly understood by preachers and teaches that this is the only hold upon which we can absolutely rely, "Commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God." If we lose our grip on the conscience, then there is absolutely nothing left upon which we can firmly lay hold.

Sometimes we have heard the question mooted, as to why it is that the churches are losing their hold upon the masses. If we concede that such is a lamentable fact, then the reason, we think, is not far to seek. In our anxiety to avoid all occasion of offense, to make religion palatable, and to make the Lord popular with the masses, we have been only too ready to mitigate the severity of the law and to modify the terms of the Gospel, and accordingly we have defeated ourselves by losing our grip upon the consciences of men. Of all the so-called Churches in the world, one would think that the Universalist would be the most popular, and yet in point of fact it is that which is most afflicted with a "beggarly array of empty benches," for just the reason already given.

There is yet another kind of grip of which we wish that we had a great deal more among those engaged in Sabbath school work; it is such a hold upon the young mortals that are gathered in the classes as will not allow of their slipping away.

The great demand now-a-days, it is alleged, is for "teachers that know how to teach." Possibly; and yet the demand is still stronger for "teachers that know how to hold." The two things do not seem to be identical. We have known of teachers who, judged by any ordinary standard, were capitally qualified, for they were thoroughly well informed and could tell all they knew, and yet somehow they emptied their classes. We have known of others who knew very little and could do very little what they knew, and yet in spite of poverty of thought and speech they held their scholars by a sort of spell.—Baptist Teacher.

MORE LOVE FOR JESUS.

BY REV. OLIVER CRANE.

Jesus, I long to be,
In all life's ministry,
More wholly Thine;
To live to Thee alone,
To have my heart Thy throne,
To be, dear Lord, Thine own,
No longer mine.

On Thee I fain would lean,
In every trying scene,
For Thy support;
Oh aid me by Thy grace,
Reveal Thy loving face,
Be Thou my hiding place,
My sure resort.

The world is rude and cold,
Its taunts, with pain untold,
My spirit chafe;
Mine is a bitter cup,
But come and with me sup
Dear Lord hold Thou me up,
And I am safe.

O may I, day by day,
Walk with Thee on my way,
As Enoch did;
Though many a dark command
I cannot understand,
Yet faith can take Thy hand,
As Thou hast bid.

Jesus on Thee I wait,
I long to have each trait
With Thee accord;
To have Thee mould my will,
Each rising murmer still,
My heart with Thee to fill
For Thee my Lord.

I long to have my soul
More under Thy control
Than e'er before;
To Thee my spirit turns,
My soul within me yearns,
To love Thee more.

Come, Lord, possess this heart,
I would its every part,
To Thee resign;
Do Thou with me abide,
Let self be set aside,
And let it be my pride,
That I am Thine.

Then, when my race is run,
When all my labors done,
I come to Thee;
O, banish every doubt,
Sustain my soul throughout,
O'er death make me to shout
The victory.

A WONDERFUL SERMON.

Richard Henry Dana's paper, in Scribner for November, on the late President Leonard Woods, of Bowdoin College, contains the following:

"Some thirty years ago, it had been announced that President Woods was to preach in what is now the parish church of the Advent, in Bowdoin St., but was then in the possession of a Congregational society, under the pastorate of Rev. Dr. Winslow. The house was well filled. President Woods spoke apparently without even notes. He spoke for nearly an hour and a half, of a warm summer afternoon, to a congregation which had been used to set their mental chronometers to twenty or thirty minutes. Yet it was a case of 'Conticuere omnes, intentique ora tenebant,' from first to last. There was not only attention, but an excited, glowing attention. His subject was 'The Delayed Justice of God,' the text being, 'Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore,' etc. For his space of time, and his purpose, he was the master of every one in the house, and Dr. Winslow, in his concluding prayer, was so carried away that he entered unconsciously upon a eulogy on the preacher, in thanking the Almighty for the great privilege we had enjoyed that day. At this time, it was rarely if ever that a preacher of the orthodox sects took examples or illustrations from elsewhere than the scriptures; but in this discourse, it seemed that, as was said of Burke, there had gone out a decree that all the world should be taxed. He drew his illustrations from all history, from all the known experience of mankind. As I have said, it is more than twenty-five years since I heard that sermon; but I can repeat, I think verbatim, many of its finest passages, and retain a clear memory of its thought and order. After some years, happening to speak with a scholarly and thoughtful man on the subject of sermons, he said that the best he had ever heard was one by President Woods in the old meeting-house in Bowdoin street, on the delayed justice of God, and he proceeded to describe it. Again at New York, at a gathering of men of letters, the subject of best sermons was started, and one of the number, a man of high repute as a writer, said that, chancing to be in Boston of a Sunday, some years before, he went to hear President Woods, at Bowdoin street, and there heard a discourse, on the delayed justice of God, which had ever remained in his mind the ideal sermon. Thus, the only three persons I know to have heard it, give it the first place; and I doubt if any intelligent hearer on that day will fail, even now, to acquiesce in this judgment.

THE BIBLE IN THE PRAYER MEETING.

Dr. James Alexander, in one of his published letters, expresses regret that the noon-day meetings in New York during the great revival of 1857–8, gave so little prominence to Scriptural instruction. Their great aim seemed to be to kindle or deepen religious emotion, while little effort was made to expound or enforce the peculiar truths of the Bible. The deficiency, which he notes, must have impressed every thoughtful Christian. We have attended meetings not a few, especially in seasons of interest, where the Word of God was not read in the opening service and no direct allusion was made to it at any time, as the source of authority, and the only guide to inquirers. The pastor and brethren seemed to rely more on exciting tunes and earnest exhortations than on the inspired Word for the salvation of souls. Little permanent good can be hoped for from such a procedure. Large numbers may be gathered into the Church, but few of them honor the cause of Christ by lives of intelligent and consistent and growing piety. There is a notable fulfillment of the prophet's words, "Thou hast multiplied the nation and not increased the joy."

Indeed is there not a general and painful need of Biblical instruction in ordinary devotional meetings? After the reading of a few verses by the pastor or leader, which are perhaps neither explained nor illustrated nor enforced, there is often no further reference to the Bible through the entire meeting. The remarks are disconnected and often aimless, inspired neither by personal experience nor by the Scriptures. The prayers long or short are not in any line of thought or desire and the people are unprofited.

Those meetings are most interesting and profitable, which give a deeper insight into God's truth and increase its vital power over the heart. Christians talk much about the importance of warm and spirited meetings, and sometimes mistake forced emotion for genuine feeling. But there can be no heat without fire, and the fire of grace can be kept up only by a constant feeding with the fuel of truth. Those church members who love the Bible most, study it most intelligently and drink in its quickening spirit, are best supporters of the prayer-meeting. When the love of others waxes cold, theirs appears the warmer by contrast. When few come to the solemn feasts of Zion, their fidelity is the more unwavering.

To give the Bible more power in the prayer meeting it must have a larger place in the closet. Christians cannot talk beyond their experience. They cannot expound what they do not understand; nor speak of truth whose power they have not felt in the heart. The Bible is not read and pondered in our day as it was by our fathers, and we are not nurtured into spiritual strength by its truths, as the Puritans of the age of Baxter and Howe and Bunyan. Business men find little time for closet reading. The newspaper, with its telegraphic dispatches and the commercial reports, absorbs more time and earnest thought than the Word of God. Young people seem to have little taste for an intimate acquaintance with the Bible. The last novel or volume of poems, or the exciting periodical tale, has a more powerful attraction for them than the revealed message from heaven.

Copies of the Bible have been multiplied beyond precedent. They are found in almost every house, and each member of a Christian family must have his own. Popular commentaries are numerous and cheap; and illustrated works, shedding a flood of light on the geography, and customs and history of Bible lands, are within the reach of all. But we fear that there is less knowledge of the Scriptures than when the helps to study were fewer. The Bible is less talked of at the fireside and in social circles; it exerts less power in meetings for devotion.

One sufficient reason alone can be assigned for all this—it is read and appropriated in the closet. When Christians feel its quickening influences in their private devotions, they will carry it with them to market-place and prayer meeting alike, as the face of Moses shone when coming from the mount, when he had communed with God.—Illustrated Christian Weekly.

Patience is the root and guardian of many other virtues; like a shield, "it interposes and stops every dart which the Evil One aims at them." Impatience is compared to the wind which disturbs the placid bosom of a lake, preventing the reflection of surrounding objects. A serene and tranquil spirit is a perfect mirror to catch the face of God smiling above it.

If it were only the exercise of the body, the moving of the lips, the bending of the knee, men would as commonly step to heaven as they go to visit a friend; but to separate our thoughts and affections from the world, to draw forth all our graces, and increase each in its proper object, and to hold them to it till the work prospers in our hands,—this, this is the difficulty.—Baxter.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from London Weekly Review:

The death is announced of Cardinal Pacca, who was made a Prince of the Church five years ago by Pius IX. The more celebrated Cardinal of the same name, who flourished at the close of the eighteenth century, was his uncle.

A pastoral letter has been issued by the Bishop of Peterborough, in which he advises his clergy to carry out the Burials Act in a spirit calculated to promote quietness, peace, and love among all Christian people.

The Spanish Minister of Justice has informed the Papal Nuncio at Madrid that the Government has determined to expel from Spanish territory any priests who introduce political subjects into their sermons. A Basque priest has already been compelled to quit Spain for this reason.

The Bombay Guardian reports that stoning missionaries is becoming a pastime in Bombay with which the police do not interfere. Recently an American missionary and three native teachers were stoned on returning from their mission chapel in the Bhendy Bazaar. One or two of them had been preaching in the vernacular, and a great crowd of Mussulmans had gathered to hear them. This provoked the Mohammedan population with the above result.

The child of a Noncomformist, named Hoare, at Teddington, has been refused interment in the parish churchyard. The right claimed was under the new Burials Act, but the churchwarden, Mr. F. O. Thynne, informed the father that the churchyard was full, observing that there was no objection to the child being buried in the consecrated portion of the cemetery which was virtually a part of the churchyard. It was denied that the churchyard was full. The consequence was that the child remained nearly a fortnight unburied. Eventually, however, the authorities gave way, and the funeral took place in the churchyard on Thursday.

It is sometimes forgotten that the Roman Catholic denomination is numerically the strongest in Canada, the population of Quebec or Lower Canada being almost exclusively Romish in their religious profession. The census of the Dominion in 1871 assigned to the various creeds the following numbers of adherents:—Roman Catholics, 1,492,000; Presbyterians, 544,998; Anglicans, 494,049; Wesleyans and Methodists, 567,091; Baptists, 239,343; Lutherans, 37,935; Congregationalist, 21,829; Miscellaneous, 65,857; of "no religion," 5575; no creed stated, 17,055; total, 3,485,761.

The Vatican organ Aurora announces that a meeting of Armenian Catholic prelates has been held in Constantinople, under the presidency of Mgr. Hassoun, for the purpose of discussing the best means of providing for the conduct of services in the vacant churches in Armenia and other important questions affecting the Catholic Church in the East. It was stated at the meeting that in Persia heretics were being converted to the Roman Catholic faith in large numbers, and many conversions from the Greek Church throughout the East were also reported. The Aurora observes, in reference to this subject, that late events in the East of Europe appear to have led to the return of several schismatical communities to the bosom of the Roman Catholic Church.

The Church Review says that it is notorious that the traffice in lithographed and MS. sermons is very great. If many are sold, many must be bought; and if many are bought, many must be read—we will not say preached—to suffering congregations. Many serious and sad reflections follow. What manner of men are they who inflict threepenny sermons on their people? Are we to suppose that the factory is a recognized Anglican institution? Perhaps candidates for the holy orders are initiated into the way of getting supplies by others, and take to them from various motives. An idle man may shrink from the inexorable course of sermons for the year. The modest man who recollects the dismal failures which his school and college themes were; the man who finds himself placed where a vast amount of parochial or secular or scholastic work is thrust upon him; and the lively young gentleman who is "quite an acquisition" to society, quickly find out who use the pulpit materials, and, seeing how easily they get through their duties, are soon emboldened to buy these cheak fabrics. Sixty warranted discourses for fifteen shillings! What a relief! What freedom! The toilsome task of compilation gone! Engagements unlimited by any necessity for study! These are the boons of the threepenny sermons. Sermons were not always so cheap. Idleness and frivolity had once to pay dearly for their indulgence; but now a course of spiritual instruction for a congregation may be had at less cost than the price of a racquet and a pair of lawn-tennis shoes.

A NORWEGIAN FAREWELL.

We left Throndhjem about midnight. Twilight wrapped the town and the surrounding hills in silence; twilight that was neither that which precedes darkness or dawn, but was of a more distinctly weird, unearthly aspect than either. This truly was "neither night nor day." It cast a pale shadow upon the faces of the little crowd of Norwegians on the lower decks, who had escorted their friends to the boat; friends bound for one or other of the ports at which we should touch on our way northward. The Norwegians are wonderful people for saying farewell. For so unemotional a race they characterize their partings by a large amount of demonstrative enthusiasm; wringing of hands and embracings, huggings and claspings, multiplying themselves ad infinitum. So was it to-night, until the captain, half laughing, half impatient, would wait no longer, and blowing the whistle for the third time, ordered the gangway to be withdrawn. Upon which ensued last embraces, tearings asunder, and a scramble for shore. Then all grew suddenly quiet, old men and women, young men and maidens, as they watched us depart—a pale shadow, as I have said, cast by this mysterious twilight upon their ghostly faces. As the men bowed solemnly—as only Norwegians can bow, they might, in the silence of this weird light, have been saluting phantoms of another world. Half instinctively one looked eastward, expecting that this light not of earth had thrown back the cloud portals, and opened to one's second sight a celestial vision. All above, however, was not blank, though lovely, space.—The Argosy.

WOMEN'S EMPLOYMENT.

The obstacles which women have found in the way of public work, observes the Spectator, so far as they arise from a general sense of their being unwomanly, will disappear in the future, and have to a considerable extent disappeared already. But so far as these obstacles belong to the nature of the employments which they already carry on, and which they cannot give up, we have no right to expect any change. Speaking generally, we should say that the change of feeling will liberate single women from the barriers that have made a career difficult, and them alone. No change of feeling can set free for a career the mother of ten children. A man's work is continuous, and a great many women might make their work continuous, if they would exercise sufficient self-control; but the mother of a family, under ordinary circumstances, must consent to be interrupted at any moment. The leisure that remains after work that is interrupted is as unlike the leisure that remains after work that is continuous as the corn-fields quitted by a foraging party in the enemy's country are to the corn-fields left by reapers who have finished their day's work. It is an idle dream to suppose that better arrangements could cure this evil. The demands of the nursery and the household could never be compressed into a compact division of the day.

MEN OF GRIT.

The large majority of men do not use a tithe of the power they possess. Their talents are mostly in a napkin. One of the wealthiest men in Wall street to-day, broke down in business a good many years ago. He went into an office where he was well acquainted, and said to the members of the firm that he had no bread for his family. "I am ready to go messages for you, or perform any other service." He hung up his coat there, and commenced work around the lowest rung of the ladder. Previously this man's check was accepted anywhere on the street. You may be sure such a man gradually mounted up.

Over in Boston a like-minded man fell out. He was without bread, and soon would be without shoes, unless he awakened up and stirred his energies. He was a book-keeper, and at one time earned a handsome salary. What did he do? This he did. He took a cotton-hook and went down to the wharf to load and unload cotton at so much an hour. Behold another man with grit. The owners of the cotton and the ship eyed this hero. Soon the decree went forth. Come up higher. He resumed the quill, and laid aside the cotton hook. Discouragement never weakened the Boston boy. Whiners, with hanging lips and chicken hearts, who cure their troubles with the bottle or the pistol, are pitiful creatures, who should never have been born.

OUR TRIP TO SYNOD.

In some respects one trip to Synod is very like to every other trip to Synod. In every case one is made the recipient of bonndless hospitality; in every case he meets friends whom he has often met before and feels that cordial shake of hand which is the telegraphic record of the heart; in every case there is the renewal of strength which comes from union and communion in the greatest of all work—the work of our Redeemer. But in some respects each trip to Synod is unlike every other trip to Synod. Each trip brings one face to face with new friends, or old friends, rather, but hitherto unknown; each trip brings that kindness which is sure to come, in new forms and in different modes; and each trip gives an encouragement all its own, to one in his special sphere of work for the Master.

We shall not in our notes of the Synod enter into details which will anticipate to any great extent the accurate and full report of the prompt and efficient stated clerk. Next week in all probability, or by the week following at farthest, our readers will know it all.

The attendance at roll call was quite large—fifty-one ministers and forty-five elders—and many came in afterwards. Rev. E. F. Rockwell, moderator, preached the opening sermon after which Rev. J Henry Smith, D. D. was elected moderator, and Rev. S. H. Chester and Rev. J. A. Ramsay were elected temporary clerks. The question of the eligibility of a ruling elder, can hardly be said to have been entertained on its merits, though some votes for that position were cast for Prof. W. J. Martin of Davidson College. A capital moderator let us say Professor Martin would have made.

The Synod declined, after an interesting discussion, to nominate at the present meeting a moderator for the next meeting. There are some points in favor of this action, but Synod evidently did not care to innorate too extensively at this time; albeit some of the proposed innovations would be desirable reforms One new measure—which by the way was suggested by a correspondent in our columns some months ago—went through. Salisbury was chosen as the next place of meeting. Thus Synod will go back to Concord Presbytery next year, when in regular course it would go to Fayetteville. This does not reflect upon the hospitality which has always been accorded to Synod by Fayetteville in the past, nor upon the heartiness of welcome, which would greet it at any time in the future, but the routine of meeting in Presbyteries by regular course was adjudged needless in itself, and in some respects undesirable.

Synod declined to convene the Presbytery of Mecklenburg at its present session. Quite an animated debate occurred on the proposition to do this, but though the majority probably would have denied the right of Synod to convene a Presbytery, the decision did not, we think, clearly decide the question of jurisdiction.

Harmony of views and kindliness of discussion are characteristic of the Synod of North Carolina, but we have seldom seen these qualities more fully displayed than in the session under view. As a consequence the reports on Publication, Sustentation, and Sabbath Schools elicited little debate. During the discussion on Education Rev. Dr. Hepburn by invitation presented the claims of Davidson College. Of this we shall have more to say hereafter.

The most interesting discussion of the session was on the report on Evangelistic Labor presented by Rev. C. M. Payne. Rev. J. Rumple, Rev. Roger Martin, Rev. S. M. Smith and Rev. Joseph Evans participated. This subject and its collateral, Evangelization of the colored people lie very near the hearts of the Synod. On the latter subject Rev. S. H. Chester and Rev. S. Taylor Martin made earnest addresses. Appropriate action was taken.

Reports and resolutions accompanying we defer in all cases for the official abstract of proceedings.

Rev. Dr. J. Leighton Wilson was present and addressed the Synod on the subject of Foreign Missions. His address as always was replete with solid facts earnestly presented, and the audience were deeply and effectively interested by his discourse. Rev. Dr. Dabney was expected and his non-appearance was a great disappointment. Rev. Dr. Alexander Martin of the Synod of Virginia and Rev. Messrs. George Summey of Kentucky, and Richard S. Burwell of Texas were heartily welcomed and by invitation sat as corresponding members.

As for ourselves, it will be pardonable to say, that we were compelled to divide our time between our friends at the Synod and our friends elsewhere. Bro. Ashe and Bro. Polk of the News and Observer we dropped in upon in season and out of season, always on the make—and we always made. By Bros. Black of the Advocate and Bailey, Hatcher and Broughton of the Biblical Recorder, we were placed under obligations by cordial kindness. Our headquarters were at Peace Institute, and never away from home, could we have been more at home. We cannot indeed draw a distinction between the measure of hospitality here, and the hospitality we have always received in our visits to the courts of our Church, for in all cases it has been immeasurable, but we were glad to be at Peace. Glad because for ourselves we could see, without seeming to see, the merits of this college for our girls. The first noticeable feature, we are speaking for others as well, was the evident contentment, even joyousness of the pupils; then the cheerful alacrity with which every signal was obeyed. We did not hear a word of command. We did not see a look or hear a word from first to last to indicate aught other than the most perfect harmony and concord. There was all proper restraint without the least appearance of restraint. The most perfect freedom was combined with discipline exact indeed, but not rigid and precise.

By invitation the members of Synod visited the school and were entertained with music under the direction of Professor Banmann, and with an exhibition of calisthenic exercises. We cannot particularize, but the musical performance could not be surpassed, and Prof. Banmann and his lady, with the pupils, fairly won the highest encomiums from the delighted auditors. The calisthenics were admirable and delighted the eyes quite as much as the music the ears of the visitors.

But we would be wanting in an essential part of our duty if we did not specially commend the high moral advantages professed by the pupils of Peace Institute. Boarders are required to attend prayers regularly in the chapel, under the direction of the principals, the venerable Rev. Robert Burwell and Mr. J. B. Burwell; a missionary society is formed in connection with the school—which by the way was addressed during Synod by Rev. Dr. Leighton Wilson—and a ladies' prayer meeting has been organized, under direction of the lady teachers.

On Thursday night Dr. Hoge delivered his lecture on "Tent Life in the East," the proceeds to be used for the benefit of the Second Presbyterian church. We decline to damage a superlative entertainment by what could only be a very inadequate description.

THE GREAT AMERICAN THEOLOGIAN.

The Life of Charles Hodge, D. D., LL.D. By his Son, A. A. Hodge. 1880. $3. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.

Charles Hodge belongs not to Presbyterians only, but to the Christian Church. His life and his labors are living and priceless benedictions on God's saints. They are fountains of wisdom, favor and piety, which will flow onward to cheer the faint and refresh the valiant in latest generations. Truly a great man has fallen in Israel, and his history has been tenderly and nobly edited by his loving son, Prof. A. A. Hodge of Princeton, and the book is sumptuously published by Chas. Scribner's Sons.

Dr. C. Hodge was born in Philadelphia of a noble ancestry in 1797. His mother was left a widow, in narrow circumstances, with two boys, Hugh, aged two years, and Charles, aged six months. To this pious and cultivated mother, he says, "he owed, under God, absolutely everything." What a blessing and power are godly mothers! But though he always prayed to and praised God, it was just as the birds do, merely with natural and not heart religion. But at Princeton, whither his mother moved, and where she took boarders in order to educate her boys, he made a public profession of conversion, and partook of the Lord's Supper in 1815. At once he commenced to work for Jesus, and his life work was all for Jesus.

We will not here trace his illustrious career, so attractively narrated by his son, but we will signalize the peculiar modesty and beauty of his character. The love of Christ did so adorn him that he drew all to him. This attracting power was most remarkable. He spent some time in Europe soon after entering his professorship in Princeton Theological Seminary. The friendships there contracted were lifelong and full of tenderness. Tholuck, Von Gerlach, Judge Otto Focke, Monod, Hengstenberg, and many others of the greatest scholars known to the world, rejoiced in his love and counsel. So did that grand Scotchman, Prof. Cunningham, a kindred spirit. Dr. Hodge's letters from Germany are very bright and instructive, and remind one of the keen discrimination and judgment displayed in Prof. R. L. Dabney's recent epistles. And who will not be thrilled with delight in recalling the fervent affection that existed between Dr. Hodge and Bishops Johns and McIlvaine, fellow students at Princeton? What a picture that of Hodge and Johns in 1875, grey saints, just before the latter's death, sitting under the maple tree in front of the Bishop's house at Malvern, Va.! The Bishop throws his arms over his companion's neck and says, "It is the last time. Let me have a good look at your face, Charley, for we shall never see each other again until we meet in heaven!" They never met here again; but the last note received from Bishop Johns "To dear Charles and his family, greeting," on January 1st, 1876, was kept within sight, in a neat frame, on the wall of Dr. Hodge's study. Loving gentleman! The children felt his magnetism, and his greatness was forgotten in his Christ-likeness.

Many are unaware that serious embarrassments compassed Dr. Hodge's labors. Undoubtedly the greatest was his intense suffering from an obscure affection of his right thigh. For a long time his leg was kept immovably fixed in a wooden splint and his body rigidly horizontal. His writing was done on a leather-covered board. He then used crutches, and one record states that for the first time in ten years he walked into town. His classes met him in his own house. These were years of critical significance and warm conflict in the history of American Presbyterianism, between 1833 and 1840. Many of Dr. Hodge's most important essays were then written. But he was a man of fine general health and of inexhaustible powers and courage for hard work. Nothing appalled him. Though he stood in a minority the courage of his convictions survived, and by Divine grace he maintained his view of the truth.

The exactness of his preparations is manifested by the complete syllabus found among his papers of each of his conference talks for many years in the Seminary. He established the Biblical Repertory, afterwards the Princeton Review, in 1825, and continued to edit it until 1872, besides contributing largely to its pages original articles. His "Way of Life" has reached a circulation of thirty-five thousand copies in America alone. He published commentaries on Romans, 1st and 2d Corinthians and Ephesians, the Constitutional History of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, and his last great work, the result of his life-studies and lectures, "Hodge's Systematic Theology," in three large octavo volumes. Truly no man can estimate too highly the magnitude and value of his long continued and marvelous industry.

With his loved and honored and great associates, Drs. A. Alexander, and S. Miller, he founded what is known as the Princeton type of theology. They were Presbyterians according to the straitest sect. His whole nature was conservative. For forty-five years he reclined, sat, read, wrote, prayed and talked in one spot of one room, his study. A picture of it is given, with his chair in the position, which will be recognized by his old students. He said pathetically a few days before he died—and he did not leave his chair until about the end of his last sickness. "This chair and I for forty years have been growing to each other very closely." "Until almost his last years he resisted all efforts made to have his clothes made elsewhere than at the same old shop, which he had patronized from the first, though all its succession of occupants." So he stood by the old landmarks of church doctrine and polity, even when during the excitements of war, popular passion drove the majority on the other side. He firmly maintained that the Church had no commission from God to decide political issues. Positive views, fair treatment of opponents and just statement of their argument, and in all discussions eminent conservatism, and fast abiding by the plain dicta of God's revealed Word, are striking characteristics of his writings. Very seldom was he so roused as to make sharp personal assaults.

This semi-centennary of 1872 at Princeton of the fiftieth year of his professorship was the apex of his life. Various churches and eminent men from many quarters of the world, united to make this a grand celebration, whose influence should be felt forever. Three thousand students have sat at Dr. Hodge's feet to learn of Jesus, and how to teach His word. Dr. Hodge's chair, it was determined should be permanently endowed; and $45,000 of the proposed $50,000 were raised by the day of celebration, and a purse of $15,350 as a present to the Doctor himself. While the congratulatory addresses were being made, he reclined on the sofa in the pulpit out of sight; for he said he never was so ashamed in his life. When asked by Dr. Boardman at the close, "How did you stand all that?" he said, with a pleasant smile. "Why, very quietly, it didn't seem at all to be me they were talking about, I heard it all as of some other man." Ex-President Theo. D. Woolsey stood on the stage, close by the pulpit where Dr. Hodge was lying, and while speaking of the tender affection he had cherished for his friend ever since 1828, when the latter had ministered words of Christian cheer, comfort and strength to his heart, then in darkness, Dr. Hodge suddenly rose and interrupted him with a kiss. Noble old man! whose autumn of life was so beautiful, though it was the "wasting beauty of the fading leaf," who, now standing almost alone as the winter was closing over him, yet seemed to be catching the forward freshness and glory of the eternal spring.

An exceptionable treat awaits all who read this delightful biography. We close our notes by a quotation from an estimate of Dr. Hodge by his friend Dr. H. A. Boardman. "It is not questioned that there have been men of still loftier intellectual culture, nor that there are names still more suggestive of universal knowledge. But no example is recalled in which an imperial intellect, mature scholarship, a creative imagination, acute sensibility, taste, affectionateness, sterling humor, a soldier's courage and a woman's gentleness, the freshness of youthful feeling unimpaired at forescore, and all the graces of the Spirit, were more exquisitely blended. In the perfect harmony of his mental and moral powers, the purity and benevolence of his life, the wisdom and felicity of his doctrine, and the charm of his conversation, we recognize the completeness of a character, the like of which we do not expect to see this side of heaven. From our heart of hearts we render thanks to that God who made him what he was, and blessed the church with his presence for eighty years."

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

CHURCHES IN CONCORD PRESBYTERY.

On the third Sabbath in October during the communion season at Thyatira church of which Rev. J. A. Ramsay is pastor, there were three additions on examination. On the fourth Sabbath at Back Creek there was one addition.

There were three additions to Bethphage church, in Concord Presbytery on the fifth Sabbath in October. Rev. J. A. Ramsay officiated at the communion, the health of Rev. Wm. W. Pharr not having yet permitted his return to such service. The friends of Mr. Pharr will be gratified to learn that there is good reason to expect a speedy return to his regular labors.

On the first Sabbath in November by appointment of Concord Presbytery Rev. J. A. Ramsay held communion services at Prospect church. On this occasion there were six additions on examination. Two of these were aged eleven and thirteen respectively, and illustrated the good results of family instruction.

On Saturday, previous to the communion services mentioned above, a congregational meeting was held and a call extended for the pastoral services of Licentiate F. P. Harrell for one-half of his time. Concord Presbytery at a meeting during sessions of Synod placed this call in Mr. Harrell's hands, and having been accepted by him, order was made for the ordination and installation on Friday before the first Sabbath in December. Rev. J. A. Ramsay is to preside and preach the sermon, Rev. P. T. Penick to deliver the charge to the pastor and Rev. Wm. W. Pharr to charge the people.

A friend sends the following:

Rev. James McQueen has just closed his series of communions of St. Andrews, Mt. Pisgah and Barbecue. At the latter place on 7th inst., one member was received into the church.

MELROSE, ROBESON COUNTY, N. C.

Rev. Hector McLean writes Nov. 9th:

It is with gratitude that we inform you that our semi-annual communion at Philadelphus yesterday, was solemn and interesting.

There were thirteen additions, and these with few exceptions were from Professor P. C. Shaw's school at the Red Springs, where they not only enjoyed, the faithful instructions of their able teachers, but the public ministrations of the gospel, at least once a week, for several weeks by Rev. Joseph Evans who is residing temporarily at the Red Springs and whose labors in various places have been blessed. We were assisted at this sacramental meeting by Rev. Andrew McMillan and Rev. Roger Martin, whose labors will result, we hope, in much good to this church.

COAL VALLEY CHURCH, WEST VIRGINIA.

Rev. L. A. McLean writes:

"I hasten to drop you a note respecting the communion at Coal Valley church.

"Friday night, the 5th inst., was set apart as the time to begin the services preparatory to the administration of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. According to previous arrangement Rev. J. C. Barr of Charlestown, W. Va., was present and preached three earnest and impressive sermons to large and attentive audiences. On Sabbath the ordinance of the Lord's Supper was administered by the same. Though the number of communicants was small, there was a solemnity which pervaded the entire body of eye-witnesses of the sacred scene which was encouraging. Not a single person left the house during the exercises. It was indeed pleasant to observe that the non-communicants had so much respect for the Lord's house and table that they would not deliberately turn their backs and walk away (as is so often the case) as if to say, 'We will not have this man to reign over us.'

"I trust we shall soon have a house of worship erected there, and large ingatherings of souls. It gives me pleasure to say that on examination of their faith in Christ three persons were added to our little flock in the Coal Valley church. It gives me pleasure, too, to acknowledge the receipt of money from North Carolina to aid in building a church at that place. The following has been received: From Mr. Neill Shaw, Lumber Bridge, Robeson county, $10; Mrs. Fannie Shaw, from same place, $3; Mrs. Lavinia McLean, Big Rockfish, $1. Taking all things into consideration, I feel very much encouraged with the prospects of Coal Valley.

WAYNESVILLE CHURCH.

Mr. Editor: Six years ago this church had no existence. There was at that time only one organized Presbyterian church in Haywood county. I refer to Bethel church, where the church property was held jointly by the Baptists, Methodists and Presbyterians, and the membership did not exceed ten persons. The Rev. D. T. Towles was at that time teaching a Peabody school at Bethel Academy. At the solicitation of some friends he began to preach at Waynesville once a month. He then went around, and wherever he could hear of a Presbyterian family or even one individual he visited them. Finding that several persons wished to join the Presbyterian church he petitioned Presbytery for an organization, and Rev. Mr. Morrison, of sainted memory, was sent to do the work. This occurred in the fall or winter of 1875. Since then Mr. Towles has continued to feed and tend the little flock. He has preached to us regularly in the cold, white winter as well as in the leafy summer. He has visited our sick and aged, buried our dead and comforted our mourning ones. All this Mr. Towles has done in a most quiet and unostentatious way. He has received no help from Presbytery and but a meagre support from the people for his services as preacher.

It gives us pleasure to acknowledge the yearly visits of Rev. A. W. Miller, whose sermons we study over until he comes again. He has shown a deep interest in our section and in our people for which we love him.

We have also had very pleasurable visits from Messrs. Evans, Davis, Martin and McIlwain. These visits have done good. Our church is growing in favor, as it must always do where it is known.

The church at Waynesville has a membership of about twenty-eight with a prospect of further increase.

Mr. Towles has been so successful under God at Waynesville, that we are glad to see that Presbytery has appointed him other mission work and we hope that he will receive from Presbytery some substantial recognition of his hard pioneer work.

MOUNTAIN PRESBYTERIAN.

We announced a short time since that Rev. P. R. Law had received a call to the Presbyterian church at Brandon, Miss. The churches which Mr. Law has been serving, Pittsboro, Haywood and Mt. Vernon, unanimously opposed his removal and Orange Presbytery declined to accept his resignation as evangelist. These evidences of acceptability, accompanied by increased pecuniary support, must be very grateful to the brother.

Among the pleasantest incidents of our recent visit to Synod was the meeting with Rev. Richard S. Burwell, of the Presbytery of Dallas, Texas, and Rev. George Summy of Kentucky. Mr. Burwell will remain here for a month or two on a visit to his relatives. Without wishing to deprive our Texas brethren of one of their most efficient workers we would be glad if the brother could be induced to return to his native State. And the same we may say of Mr. Summey, who would find a warm welcome among us.

Believing it to be a matter of great interest to our readers, we requested Rev. M. H. Houston of Taylorsville, Ky., to send us notes of the practical working of the tithe system in the church of which he is pastor. We have his response in hand, but too late for insertion in this issue; will give it to our readers next week. We have also from Mr. Houston his tract on the subject of the "Tithe," and will have more to say hereafter. In the meantime we state that persons desiring copies can obtain them at the rate of one dollar per dozen copies. Address Rev. M. H. Houston, Taylorsville, Ky.

Rev. R. P. Kerr who has been serving the church at Columbus, Ga., as stated supply has been called to the pastorate by a unanimous vote.

The Presbytery of Tombeckbee ordained Mr. H. W. Flinn. He is to be the pastor of churches at Okolona and West Point in the Presbytery of Tombeckbee.

THANKSGIVING.

Thursday Nov. 25th has been appointed by President Hayes as Thanksgiving Day.

No better plan for exhibiting our gratitude to the Giver of all good for the mercies and blessings of the past year could be inaugurated than that of taking up a collection for the Oxford Orphan Asylum wherever religious services are held on Thanksgiving Day. Where services are not held on that day let it be taken up on the Sabbath morning following Thanksgiving Day and let the Sabbath schools all tender the same institution a thanksgiving offering on the first Sabbath in December. We hope the suggestion will be carried out by the clergy and Sabbath school superintendents as cheerfully as the religious and secular press will extend the notice of the suggestion which they have been requested to do.

DAVIDSON COLLEGE.

We have been requested (and we cheerfully comply) to publish the following paper relative to Davidson College:

To the Trustees, Patrons and Friends of Davidson College:

DEAR BRETHREN: By direction of the trustees I send to you a copy of a report on the condition of Davidson College, prepared by Dr. Adger, at the late meeting of the Board of Trustees, with the request that you secure its insertion in such paper or papers as may be willing to place their columns at your disposal for that purpose. By attending to this matter at once you will confer a favor upon the College, and promote the cause of education. Yours, truly, J. RUMPLE,
Secretary Board of Trustees.

Salisbury, June 25, 1880.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE ON THE STATE OF DAVIDSON COLLEGE, JUNE 16, 1880.

From a careful examination of the papers submitted to them your committee are persuaded that this Board have reason to be thankful to God for the large measure of prosperity which He has vouchsafed to this institution. The increased number of its students, their marked diligence in study during the past year, the large number of candidates for the ministry gathered within its walls, the high tone of morals prevalent generally among the young men who resort to this fountain of learning, and the flattering attestations to the scholarship displayed among them from distinguished professors of Princeton College, the University of Virginia and Vanderbilt University (who decided upon the merits of the various papers competing for the prizes)—all these circumstances, together with the healthful condition of its finances, stamp the present as a very flourishing period in the history of Davidson College. And we should add, as another feature of this Institution, which ought to encourage its friends to stand by it, that it is giving every year a large amount of gratuitous instruction to indigent worthy young men. Exactly one half of its student during the past year have paid no tuition, amongst whom there are fifteen ministers' sons, besides nineteen candidates for the ministry.

Having referred to the condition of the finances as healthful, we may properly particularize, and state that there has been both an increase of income and a decrease of debt during the past year, and that the general result is that our assets are both enlarged in their bulk and improved in their character. This reflects honor on the skill and faithfulness of our Treasurer and our Finance Committee.

The collections from interest and bank dividends are this year $6,026 74 more than they were last year. The increase in this particular is due, in part, to the collection of overdue coupons, belonging to previous years. The debts of the College this year are $512 less than they were last year. The income which is reasonably counted on, and expected for the year to come, exceeds our anticipated expenses. The whole debt resting upon the College is only $1,812, and we think there is good reason to hope it will all be lifted in the course of the next two years. And then there is an increase of available assets to the amount of $2,360. These stand now at the figure of $88,500, while the real estate is estimated to be worth not less than $150,000.

These statements, we think, should greatly cheer the hearts of all the friends of Davidson.

DAVIDSON COLLEGE, June 14, 1880.

To the Moderators of Presbyteries controlling Davidson College:

DEAR BRETHREN:—At the close of another collegiate year, it is proper that the Board of Trustees of Davidson College should place before you—the several Presbyteries sharing in the Government of the Institution—as full and as accurate a statement of the condition of the college as possible. We enter upon the discharge of this duty with great pleasure, believing that the more thoroughly the several Presbyteries—the official guardians of the college—know their ward, her patient efforts, her triumphs, her brightening prospects for enlarged usefulness, as well as her present wants, the more highly will they appreciate her, and the more devoted will they become to her interests.

It is thought that the following summary will present to your view the present outlook of the college:

1. The patronage of the College: The roll for the year just closed, gives the whole number of students as 112. This is an increase over last year of six. Of this number North Carolina furnished twenty-five, South Carolina, forty-three, Georgia nine, Tennessee, two, Alabama, two, Arkansas, one, Florida, one, and Texas, one. Eleven of these are in the preparatory class, and the remainder (101) are in the regular college classes.

2. Internal state of the College: During the past year—we are thankful to be able to note—that the labors of the president and five professors have not been interrupted by protracted illness. They have discharged their duties faithfully, and we trust, successfully. The students have manifested a commendable degree of diligence in prosecuting their studies. The deportment, in the main has been good. Constant care has been given to their moral culture; and it is believed that a healthful religious atmosphere prevails in the college.

Before leaving this part of the subject, it may be well to mention—not in a vainglorious spirit, but in order to give you the impartial judgment of competent critics of the work done here—that distinguished scholars of leading institutions of learning, to whom were referred the papers of competitors for prizes, speak in the highest terms of the very highest praise of the character of these examinations, and of the remarkable proficiency of the several competitors. Such endorsements from such sources may well cause us to feel thankful for the high stand our college has already taken among the foremost institutions of learning in this country.

3. Financial status of the College: The interest bearing assets of the college now amount to $88,500. Besides this, the real estate of the corporation is worth, perhaps, not less than $150,000. The revenue of last year, from all sources, will foot up about $13,400. Of this amount, $6,212 was received as interest from invested funds, and $7,188 as college dues.

The outlay for the same period, for professors salaries, repairs on buildings, insurance, &c., is $13,000. This leaves $400 to go on the debt of the college, which reduces the entire indebtedness of the corporation to about $1,800. It may be mentioned here, that during the past year there have been some extraordinary expenses for repairs, insurance for a number of years, which will not occur every year. With the present prospects before us, it is hoped that in two years or less, the college will be free from debt.

4. Benevolent work of the College: This feature of the work of the college is far more considerable than is generally known. Last year free tuition was given to nineteen candidates for the ministry and to sixteen sons of ministers, making thirty-five who enjoyed the privileges of the college free of cost. In addition to this fifteen others gave their notes for their tuition bills, and fifteen were passed on scholarships. If to all these we add eleven others, who gave their notes for dues exclusive of tuition, and the bell-ringer, who received his tuition for his services, we have fifty-six, who in a greater or lesser degree received assistance from the college—just one-half of the whole number of students. From the above outline of the affairs of the college it is apparent that the one great present, pressing need of the institution is more students. Send us these from your congregations, and by the blessing of God Davidson College will do a work for the Church and country, the magnitude and importance of which cannot be easily overestimated.

Brethren! As you meet from time to time with your people and your friends, who have sons to be educated, don't forget to tell them what manner of college ours is.

But above all, as you approach, at the mercy seat, Him in whose name it was founded, and to whose glory it has been consecrated, pray that His blessing, as in the past, so in the future, may rest upon us.

By order of the Trustees.

L. McKINNON, President.

OBSERVANCE OF THE SABBATH.

The following report of a Committee of Fayetteville Presbytery on the Observance of the Sabbath we publish by request:

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE SABBATH.

Your Committee beg leave to make the following report:

1. They are fully persuaded that the subject entrusted to them is of the greatest practical importance and of a most momentous nature. That the sanctity of the Sabbath, and its careful observance, is one of the two great foundation stones upon which society rests, and upon which depends the perpetuity of all good social, political and religious institutions. That it, like the marriage relation, the integrity of which is the other great foundation stone of society, has survived the Fall, having its origin in Paradise, while man was yet in a sinless state. That inasmuch as "the Sabbath was made for man," the highest interests of his nature demand a most scrupulous and religious observance thereof, and that his civilization, prosperity and happiness, both temporal and spiritual, depend upon it. That both revelation and reason, both the teachings of God's word and human history and experience, concur in a most remarkable way in demonstrating that the sanctity of this day and its due observance are essential to the highest interests of the race; that men and nations are pious and prosperous in proportion to their religious regard for this day, and that God has appeared more jealous and careful to vindicate the Fourth Commandment by swift and terrible providential judgments, following immediately upon the heels of the transgression, than, perhaps, any other—or, in other words, his providential judgments, punishing the violations of the Sabbath, have been more marked clear and unmistakable than in reference to other sins. That it is of the greatest possible importance to the health and prosperity of the people, to the cause of religion, the purity and piety of the church, and to the advancement and perpetuity of good morals, that all our citizens, and especially God's professed people, should be carefully instructed as to the nature, tendency and design of the Sabbath, and be encouraged and stimulated to a more scrupulous and devout observance of the day.

2. Your committee are more and more led to fear, from what they can gather that, while there is in our churches especially, and in our communities generally, a degree of decent external observance of the Sabbath, yet the real desecrations of the day are both alarming and wide-spread, and that these prevail to a painful extent even among professed christians and church members; that the frequent and flagrant violation and disregard of the Sabbath among worldly men, and on the part of national, state and local governments, of railroad and other corporations, and of public carriers, is due to a large extent to the example of christians in their less flagrant, but not less real violations of the day, to their patronage of Sabbath breakers and of their works, and to their failure to pronounce and protest against them in a positive and unequivocal way: that many christians are losing sight of the great fact, that the morality of the Sabbath—that is, its obligation and sanctity—consists in honestly giving God fully one-seventh of our time; and that hence, while our churches are filled of a Sabbath morning in a gratifying way by our people generally, manifesting a commendable degree of reverence and decorum, yet many are found, even about the house of God, spending the time before and after the public services in gossip about politics, news, farming, business and other equally secular and worldly matters; while many more devote the afternoon of the holy Sabbath to neighborly visiting, reading secular newspapers or worldly books, strolling over the farm looking after the state of their flocks, herds and crops, or in some other mild form of worldly self-indulgence; while others again do not hesitate to begin or end a journey on the Sabbath; thus, in these various ways, clearly robbing God of a portion of His day and desecrating it: that many of our families, while they are careful as households to attend upon the sanctuary during the earlier part of the Sabbath, are not careful to reverence the latter part, as families in their homes, as becometh pious people; and that comparatively few give any portion of the day to special household instruction in our catechisms and in the Word of God, and to family worship.

3. Your committee is clearly of the opinion that a reformation in the observance of the Sabbath ought to begin first in the Church, and among the Lord's professed people; and that until we can educate christians up to a higher standard of Sabbath observance, and to a more perfect example in this direction, there is very little reasonable ground to hope that the attitude of governments and corporations, and the general aspect of the world will materially change for the better as respects the Sabbath.

4. Your committee is also clearly of the opinion, that Presbytery, as a court of the Lord of the Sabbath, ought earnestly to turn its attention in this direction, and use the most strenuous efforts that wisdom may dictate to bring all the people and churches under its care to a more general, scrupulous and devout observance of the Lord's day. For we are fully persuaded that more is to be feared for the cause of pure religion from the frequent efforts now made in portions of our land to undermine the Sabbath, to weaken its sanctity and to prostitute it from its holy and spiritual uses as a beautiful type and emblem of heaven to a day of mere recreation and amusement; and from the too prevalent tendency to a lax and imperfect observance of it, than from any or all other phases of infidelity that have manifested themselves in our times.

From these considerations your committee are led to offer respectfully the following recommendations:

1. That Presbytery endeavor by all proper methods to continue the agitation of this important subject.

2. That at each Fall meeting of Presbytery a committee be appointed to serve for the year.

3. That Presbytery appoint one of its members to preach an annual sermon on the subject before the body.

4. That Presbytery appoint a committee to prepare a special pastoral letter on the subject of the Sabbath, to be sent down to our churches.

Said letter shall mention in detail and particularly the various ways in which Christians generally violate the Sabbath, or are liable to do so, and warn our people against them. It shall be the duty of this committee to examine and study, as far as practicable, the existing literature on the subject, and select and recommend suitable brief practical treatises in tract form for general distribution among our church members; and that Presbytery take such measures as may be in its power to secure their general dissemination and reading.

5. That each minister under our care be earnestly requested to preach to each of his churches one sermon at least each year on the observance of the Sabbath.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

These churches belong to Bethel Presbytery, and are a part of his field of labor. Ramah church was organized on the 15th of November, 1879, with eighteen members. Now it numbers forty members, with a good prospect of continued rapid increase. During this ingathering there were twenty-six baptisms, infants and adults.

Rev. J. C. Carothers writes from Grenada, Miss.: "We received nine additions to our church upon examination last Sabbath, the 31st of October."

Rev. J. W. Moseley writes us: "Our home will hereafter be Meridian, Miss." His correspondents will please note the change of his postoffice address from Garlandsville to that point.

From the Southwestern Presbyterian:

Rev. J. Y. Allison writes from Monroe, La., under the date of October 28th: "We have good news from Trenton church. The Methodist brethren there held a meeting nearly two weeks. The interest was very pleasant, especially among the young people, and extended to all the churches. One young lady, a child of the covenant, united with the Methodist church. On last Sabbath, my regular monthly appointment there, the session met after morning service, and our hearts were made glad by receiving into full communion on profession of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, three young persons, all children of the covenant, of one family—one a young man just entering upon the responsibilities of life, the other two young girls of intelligent faith and promise. We take courage, and rejoice to record this token of the favor of our covenant God in honoring the efforts of parental instruction; and that these, honoring and redeeming the pledges made in their behalf, have now taken their place in the Church of God. Let parents train their children in the church, for they are so recognized in baptism. Let them train them as God's children, for they are so acknowledged in baptism.

"Father Campbell closed a very interesting meeting in Rayville on Tuesday. I assisted from Thursday until Saturday noon, when Bro. J. S. Frierson came and continued until Tuesday. There was one accession to the church.

"Bro. Frierson will probably remain at Delhi."

We cull what follows from the Presbyterian:

PRESBYTERIAN (NORTH).

The name of the Rev. Frank Olendenin has been dropped from the roll of the Presbytery of Cairo, he having renounced its jurisdiction.

The Rev. E. S. McMichael, who has been a minister of the United Presbyterian church, has accepted a call to become pastor of the Third Presbyterian church of Springfield, Ill. His late associates part from him with great regret.

The gain in membership in the Synod of Texas for the three years has been 76½ per cent. A small portion of this percentage is due to the temporary addition to the Synod of a church in Florida and a church in New Orleans. During the same period eight churches have been erected in the Presbytery of North Texas, at a cost of $15,000.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

At the Vermont Episcopal Convention two gentlemen offered the diocese $10,000 for an endowment of the Episcopate, provided the Convention would raise $15,000 for the purpose, which it pledged itself to do.

The Missionary Bishops elected at the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church were Rev. G. K. Dunlop for Montana; Rev. Leigh R. Brewer for New Mexico and Arizona, and Rev. Dr. Paddox, of Brooklyn, for Washington Territory. The Convention Refused to take any measure for the reduction of its size, or the alteration of the basis of representation.

METHODIST.

Chrisman Hall, the new college for colored youth, at Atlanta, Georgia, has just been opened, and is already nearly filled with pupils. It has a president and five teachers, who are paid by the Freedmen's Aid Society, and the price of tuition is very small. Mrs. Chrisman, of Topeka, gave $10,000 for the establishmant of the college.

The white and colored members of the Holston Conference desired separate conferences, and they have been organized. They seem to be more comfortable apart.

BAPTIST.

Some years ago Rev. Mr. Mundy left the Baptist church in Syracuse, N. Y., of which he was pastor, having adopted Unitarian views, and established an Independent church, which built a neat brick house of worship, which has just been sold to the English Lutherans, the Independent church having disbanded.

During the year from $150,000 to $200,000 have been spent in liquidating church debts in the Baptist churches in the State of New York. Nine new church buildings have been dedicated, and five churches organized. Over four thousand have been baptized into the churches, nearly two thousand of them from the Sunday schools.

CONGREGATIONAL.

A gift of $25,000 has been made by Deacon John B. Eldridge of Hartford, Conn., to complete the purchase of Memorial Hall in that city as a building to be used for the headquarters of the denominational interests in the State.

The Rev. Frank W. Gunsaulus, who was ordained pastor of the High street Congregational church, Columbus, Ohio, last month, has been a successful minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The Vermont Congregationalists have sent out two hundred foreign missionaries.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. W. SHERAR, 149 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

On our recent visit to Raleigh we had occasion to visit the establishment of our friends and patrons Messrs. R. B. Andrews & Co., wholesale and retail dealers in clothing. Their stock is large and extensive, their establishment extending from street to street. We commend them to our friends everywhere. We also called on Messrs. Yeargan, Petty & Co. Their stock is large in dress goods, and every article wanted in supplying families or dealers in the dry goods line. This firm makes a specialty of black goods, and their Raven Black Alpaccas can be specially commended to ladies for durability and cheapness.

AN ONLY DAUGHTER CURED OF CONSUMPTION.

When death was hourly expected, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting with the many herbs of Calcutta, he accidentally made a preparation which cured his only child of Consumption. His child is now in this country and enjoying the best of health. He has proved to the world that Consumption can be positively and permanently cured. The Doctor now gives this Recipe free, only asking two green stamps to pay expenses. This Herb also cures night-sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold up in twenty-four hours Address CRADDOCK & CO., 1032 Race St, Philadelphia, naming this paper.

The most difficult thing to raise on a farm is a mortgage; it requires the best of culture and the richest of soil.

Since the opening of the colored insane asylum in North Carolina the institution has lost one patient by death. There are now about eighty inmates.

A little girl sent out to hunt eggs came back unsuccessful, complaining that "lots of hens were standing round doing nothing."

During 1878 Germans smoked about 7,000,000,000 cigars, or two daily for 10,000,000 smokers, besides over 60,000 tons of tobacco. The whole value of the tobacco wasted in smoke was over $85,000,000.

A singular fatality seems to attach to the Hinds family, in Pulaski county, Ky., says the Danville Advocate. On the morning of Oct. 12th, the last of the three brothers while crossing the Cumberland at the mouth of Fishing Creek, fell from his horse and was drowned. All were drowned at this same crossing, and all died in a state of intoxication.

"My case is just here," said a lawyer to a citizen the other day; "the plaintiff will swear that I hit him. I will swear that I did not. Now, what can you lawyers make out of that if we go to trial?" "Five dollars apiece," was the prompt reply.

IN MEMORIAM.

At his home in Waynesville, N. C., after an illness of twenty-three days, Oct. 27th 1880, JEREMIAH RATCLIFF, JR., departed this life, aged forty-two years, five months and fourteen days.

The deceased was apparently in his usual health which was never good. He was never free from pain, although he scarcely ever complained. He attended preaching at Bethel the first Sabbath in Oct returned home that evening, was more cheerful than usual, and after family worship, retired to rest. He arose at 3 a. m. Monday morning to write some business letters, was stricken down with apoplexy and then lingered three weeks and two days. All that medical skill and kind attention could do were done for him, but he only lingered long enough to show that they could avail nothing. His brain and one-half of his body were partially paralyzed, but when friends approached him he would recognize them by extending his hand to them. He could only utter a few words at a time, but enough to show that all was peace and calm within. On one occasion, an attendant noticed that he seemed to wish to say something, told his wife to go to his bed-side and she told the writer of this that with eyes raised upward she understood him to say, "So happy, so happy." At another time she asked him if it was the Lord's will to take him away at this time was he willing to go. He said, "O yes." When asked if the Lord was with him he said "O yes, O yes."

The deceased had for about nine years previous to his death held the office of Clerk of the Court and Probate Judge, and had discharged all his duties with singular fidelity and acceptance. He was one of those men, to whom others would go for counsel and advice and he never disappointed them, or betrayed their confidence.

He was married in Feb, 1861 to Miss Louisa J. Battle, who still survives to mourn her irreparable loss.

To show the great esteem in which he was held by the citizens of his county, it is only necessary to state that they came in such great numbers to inquire after his health, that his physicians, knowing how important it was that he should be kept quiet ordered his doors to be kept locked. I heard one say that he would give ten dollars just to see him. And when the burial services took place although it was a cold, rainy day, perhaps not more than half could find even standing room in the Methodist church, where the services were performed, while large numbers stood outside at the open windows in the pelting rain.

Brother Ratcliff was one of the eight who nearly five years ago were organized as the Presbyterian Church of Waynesville. He was baptized and received at the same time, then elected one of the Ruling Elders, and ordained and installed over the same, and was a very efficient elder.

He was an excellent and devotedly pious man, as all who knew him would testify. He was a kind and loving husband, a dutiful son, an affectionate brother, a faithful friend, a genial companion and a Christian gentleman.

The little church of which he was an elder mourns his loss. For some time past the great desire of his heart was to see the Presbyterian church in Waynesville, which was commenced a few months ago completed. That pleasure was denied him. The Great Head of the Church buries His workmen, but still carries on His work. With the blessing of God and the aid of friends, the Church will be built.

"And I heard a voice from Heaven saying unto me, Write blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth, Yea sayeth the Spirit that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

FOR THE FAMILY.

Slipping Away.

They are slipping away—these sweet, swift years,
Like a leaf on the current cast;
With never a break in their rapid flow,
We watch them as one by one they go
Into the beautiful past.

As silent and swift as a weaver's thread,
Or an arrow's flying gleam;
As soft as the languorous breezes hid,
That lift the willow's long golden lid,
And ripple the glassy stream.

As light as the breath of the thistle-down;
As fond as a lover's dream;
As pure as the flush in the sea-shell's throat,
As sweet as the wood-bird's wooing note,
So tender and sweet they seem.

One after another we see them pass,
Down the dim-lighted stair;
We hear the sound of their steady tread
In the steps of the centuries long since dead,
As beautiful and as fair.

There are only a few years left to love;
Shall we waste them in idle strife?
Shall we trample under our ruthless feet
Those beautiful blossoms, rare and sweet,
By the dusty way of life?

There are only a few swift years—ah, let
No envious taunts be heard;
Make life's fair pattern of rare design,
And fill up the measure with love's sweet wine,
But never an angry word!

The Drummer Boy.

One cold December morning about eighty years ago, a party of tourists were crossing the Alps—and a pretty large party, too, for there were several thousands of them together. Some were riding, some walking, and most of them had knapsacks on their shoulders, like many Alpine tourists now-a-days. But instead of walking sticks they carried muskets and bayonets, and dragged along with them fifty or sixty cannon.

In fact, these tourists were nothing less than a French army; and a very hard time of it they seemed to be having. Trying work certainly, even for the strongest man, to wade for miles through knee-deep snow in this bitter frost and biting wind, along these narrow, slippery mountain paths; with precipices hundreds of feet deep all round. The soldiers looked thin and heavy-eyed for want of food and sleep, and the poor horses that were dragging the heavy guns stumbled at every step.

But there was one among them who seemed quite to enjoy the rough marching, and tramped along through the deep snow and cold, gray mist—through which the great mountain peaks overhead loomed like shadowy giants—as merrily as if he were going to a picnic. This was a little drummer-boy of ten years old, whose fresh, rosy face looked very bright and pretty among the grim, scarred visages of the old soldiers. When the cutting wind whirled a shower of snow in his face he dashed it away with a cheery laugh, and awoke all the echoes with the lively rattling of his drum, till it seemed as if the huge black rocks around were all singing in chorus.

"Bravo, Petit Tambour!" (little drummer) cried a tall man in a shabby gray cloak, who was marching at the head of the line, with a long pole in his hand, and striking it into the snow every now and then, to see how deep it was, "Bravo, Pierre, my boy. With such music as that one could march all the way to Moscow"

The boy smiled, and raised his hand to his cap in salute, for this rough looking man was no other than the general himself, "Fighting Macdonald," one of the bravest soldiers in France, of whom his men used to say that one sight of his face in battle was worth a whole regiment

"Long live our general," shouted a hoarse voice, and the cheer, flying from mouth to mouth, rolled along the silent mountains like a peal of distant thunder.

But its echo had hardly died away when the silence was again broken by another sound of a very different kind—a strange, uncanny sort of whispering far away up the great white side. Moment by moment it grew louder and harsher, till at length it swelled into a deep, hoarse roar.

"On your faces, lads!" roared the general; "it's an avalanche!"

But, before his men had time to obey, the ruin was upon them. Down thundered the great mass of snow, sweeping the narrow ledge path like a waterfall, and crashing down along with it came heaps of stones and gravel and loose earth, and uprooted bushes, and great blocks of cold blue ice. For a moment all was dark as night; and when the rush had passed, many of the brave fellows who had been standing on the path were nowhere to be seen. They had been carried down over the precipice, and either killed or buried alive in the snow.

But the first thought of their comrades was not for them. When it was seen what had happened one cry arose from every mouth:

"Where's our Pierre? Where's our little drummer?"

Where, indeed? Look which way they would nothing was to be seen of their poor little favorite, and when they shouted his name there was no answer. Then there broke forth a terrible cry of grief, and many a hard old soldier, who had looked without flinching at a line of levelled muskets, felt the tears start that that face would never be seen among them again.

But all at once, far below them, out of the shadows of the black unknown gulf that lay between those tremendous rocks, arose the faint roll of a drum, beating the charge. The soldiers started and bent eagerly forward to listen; then up went a shout that shook the air.

"He's alive, comrades! our Pierre's alive after all!"

"And beating his drum still, like a brave lad! He wanted to have the old music to the last!"

"But we must save him, lads, or he'll freeze to death down there. He must be saved!"

"He shall be!" broke in a deep voice from behind, and the general himself was seen standing on the brink of the precipice, throwing off his cloak.

"No, no, general!" cried the grenadiers with one voice; "you mustn't run such a risk as that. Let one of us go instead; your life is worth more than all of ours put together."

"My soldiers are my children," answered Macdonald quietly, "and no father grudges his own life to save his son."

The soldiers knew better than to make any more objections. They obeyed in silence, and the general was swinging in mid air, down, down, down, till he vanished at last into the darkness of the cold, black depth below.

Then every man drew a long breath, and all eyes were strained to watch for the first sign of his appearing, for they knew well that he would never come back without the boy, and that the chances were terribly against him.

Meanwhile Macdonald, having landed safely at the foot of the precipice, was looking anxiously around in search of Pierre; but the beating of the drum had ceased, and he had nothing to guide him.

"Pierre!" shouted he, at the top of his voice, "where are you, my boy?"

"Here, general!" answered a weak voice, so faint that he could hardly distinguish it.

And there, sure enough was the little fellow's curly head, half buried in a huge mound of snow, which alone had saved him from being dashed to pieces against the rocks as he fell. Macdonald made for him at once; and although he sank waist deep at every step, reached the spot at last.

"All right now, my brave boy, said the general, cheerily, "put your arms around my neck and hold tight; we'll have you out of this in a minute."

The child tried to obey, but his stiffened fingers had lost all their strength; and even when Macdonald himself clasped the tiny arms around his neck their hold gave way directly.

What was to be done? A few minutes more, and the numbing cold of that dismal place would make the rescuer as powerless as him who came to rescue. But General Macdonald was not the man to be so easily beaten. Tearing off his sash and knotting one end of it to the rope, he bound Pierre and himself firmly together with the other, and then gave the signal to haul up.

And when the two came swinging into the daylight once more, and the soldiers saw their pet still alive and unhurt, cheer upon cheer rang out, rolling far back along the line, till the very mountains themselves seemed to be rejoicing.

"We've been under fire and snow together," said Macdonald, chafing the boy's cold hands tenderly, "and nothing shall part us two after this, so long as we both live."

And the general kept his word. Years later, when the great wars were all over, there might be seen walking in the garden of a quiet country house in the south of France a stooping, white-haired old man, who had once been the famous Marshal Macdonald; and he leaned for support upon the arm of a tall, black-moustached, soldier-like fellow, who had once been little Pierre, the drummer.—Western Catholic.

Helping a Fellow Up.

Tommy is tugging away at another urchin who is pittifully crying on the ground.

"What are you doing, Tommy?" "O! only helping a fellow up!"

That is right, Tommy. Now, take that as your motto through life, to help a fellow up.

There is that drunkard who is down through drink, and there is the man that is poor, or sick, or tempted. Give each a hand, and hold a fellow up.

What would have become of Martin Luther, when he was a young man singing in the streets for his bread, if some one who had an eye to observe him and a heart to feel for him, had not put out a hand and helped a fellow up? There are thousands to-pay who never could have stood where they now are if friendly souls had not extended aid and helped a fellow up.

LICHENS.

The lichens while occupying but the next round in the ladder of vegetable life, are vastly more esteemed, not only because of their self-supporting nature but because of their usefulness. Writing their poetic-legends of the years that go by, they clothe the bare rocks with life; dye them as only Omnipotence, working by means, could dye; breathe into them the language of beauty to add to that of solemity; they soften and diversify the coloring of our landscapes; beautifying with an ever changeful and tender toning much of our living vegetation, and with a more humble touch than that of their kindred, the mosses, they throw a living veil over the dead; it would be impossible to estimate the change which would be produced in the face of nature should the lichens be banished forever. However unassuming in their forms, unobtrusive in coloring, they are the embodiment of poetical feeling; the writing of an unseen Hand; the legends of the years. But as man himself is not only a spiritual but a material being, whose vocation is not only that of inspiration but of effort, these creations have service of love to offer; and we find them after having written the story of the time they have lived and cast in their changeable shades among the mysterious webs with which God makes the world beautiful, coming to use in more material ways, giving men dyes for their tissues, medicine for their ailments, and even food. Our Arctic travelers, Franklin, Back, and others, found the lichens of the north their chief means of subsistence during much of their stay in the frozen regions. Iceland moss, of which a nourishing jelly is made, belongs to the lichen family, and the common lichen known as "lungs of the oak" is used for the same purpose by the inhabitants of Siberia for making a bitter beer. Reindeer moss is invaluable for the Laplanders in feeding their reindeer during the long winters. In Canada there is a form of lichen food much used by hunters, and known as "tripe de roche."

The chief dye-producing class of lichen is the rocella tinctoria, or orchella lichen, which is found in the Canary and Cape Verde islands, also on the isle of Portland, and in less abundance in Guernsey. A powder is produced from this species of a deep crimson color, somewhat approaching violet; it is, unfortunately, not as permanent as could be wished, and is used more as a preparation to rich dyes of other subsistances than alone. Other lichens have dyeing and medicinal qualities. Many of the species are productive of a subsistance called uconine, which is of a yellow color but changes by exposure to the atmosphere; to it are due many of the agreeable combinations of color in the various lichens. The thallus "may be regarded as the plant proper, as it performs all the functions of root, stem and leaves." The thallus is very variable in form and color, and consists wholly of cellular tissue; the structure is not homogeneous, but the microscope discovers frequently a number of distinct layers. The apothecia, or organs of fructification, are usually upon the margin or surface, though occasionally found beneath the surface, and they appear in different shapes disks; sometimes they describe elongated forms which resemble Japanese letters, and are called "written lichens." These disks, which are of so much interest to lichen hunters, are sometimes flat upon the surface of the plant and sometimes raised on little stalks; as the disks are best developed in full light, they are seldom found in shaded places, though many who seek them, possibly with the feeling of seclusion is best suited to their humble nature, direct their fruitless search to shadowy nooks and clifts of the rocks.

Very beautifully, in their unassuming way, do the lichens fill their God-given places, and the deeper we gaze into the wonders of the world beneath us in its manifold developments may we feel that the ground whereon we stand is holy ground, and the hand of its Maker a holy, adorable hand.—Christian Union.

The New Process of Chrome Tanning.

For some time back the mineral process of tauning leather, discovered three years ago by Dr. C. Heinzerling, and carried on at several tanneries in Germany has been exciting considerable interest among the leading manufactures of Great Britain. The longest period claimed for the process of tauning by this method is only some three or four weeks, which, when compared with the time necessary for bark tanning methods, seems something extraordinary. The bichromate of potash, the new tanning agent, is very largely manufactured in Glasgow, and we need not therefore be surprised, that one of the largest and most enterprising chemical manufacturing companies should have conceived the idea of introducing the chrome tanning process into this country. Therefore the manager of the Eglinton Chemical Company of Glasgow, Mr. W. J. A. Donald, who seems to take a keen interest in everything which goes on in the chemical world, went to Germany to watch and study the process. The result has been that this Company has acquired the control of the patent rights of the invention or discovery for Great Britain and the Colonies, and they resolved to initiate the new process by the erection meantime of a small experimental, or as they term it exhibition tannery. The tannery is situated in Glebe Street, under the shadow of the great chemical factories of Tennant of St. Rollox, and Townsend of Port-Dundas. It was commenced only in the end of May last, since which time tan pits have been dug, machinery put in, and over 300 hides put through a fairly perfect process of tanning, and with very satisfactory results to the company themselves. These hides have been converted into almost all the varieties of leather used in manufactures. Having so far matured their plans the Eglington Chemical Comany issued invitations to the leather trade throughout the country to visit their tannery on Friday last and inspect the new manufacture.

The chrome tanning process differs little from the bark process. The hides when brought into the tannery receive a dip into a water tank, and are afterwards thoroughly washed in a large revolving cylinder. They are then treated to lime in the usual manner, the dehairing process being identical with that pursued elsewhere. The hides are then treated, in tan pits to the ordinary construction, with the chemical liquor produced from the bichromate, the liquor being used in different degrees of strength to suit the various hides and description of leather undergoing the tanning process. There are some ten or twelve pits altogether, and the only peculiarity we noticed is an invention of Mr. Donald's and one which may with advantage be applied to all tan pits, viz: the passing of a current of air through the tan liquor by a small pump worked by the engine, by which a constant commotion is kept up in the pit, and the chemicals or tanning kept from sinking to the bottom. The chemical process of conversion of hide into leather by whatever agencies, bark or chrome, is greatly assisted by the agitation kept up, and we understand that at least one large tanner from England on Friday was so convinced of the merits of this invention that he means at once to introduce it into his own bark tanning pits.—The Scottish Leather Trader.

Unsinkable Ships.

The problem of rendering ships unsinkable has from the earliest times received careful attention from inventors and others, and various propositions for effecting this object have been advanced from time to time, although, so far as we are aware, none of them have ever been introduced in practice. This question has found another advocate in Mr. Lamb, of London, who has had a steam launch built to illustrate his system. This launch was inspected, and a short run was made in her at North Woolwich by a party of gentlemen interested in steam navigation. The principle consists in attaching to the sides of the hull of a vessel a series of flat air-tight metallic cylinders or drums, the inner heads of which are built into, and form part of the framing and inner skin of the vessel. These drums project on either side of the ship and are cased in, the under sides of the casings normally resting upon the surface of the water, and becoming slightly immersed under a load. The result is a light draught with great freeboard, and it is claimed that a greater stability under canvass and a higher rate of speed under steam or sail are thereby attained, besides several other contingent advantages. The principles of the system and the construction of the launch, which has no pretention to beauty, were explained to the visitors during a short run, in which a fair speed was maintained, the vessel moving very steadily. There can be no question of the safety of such a vessel under most circumstances as regards her immunity from sinking, although in applying the principle in practice several questions of detail will have to be met which have not been considered in the launch in question. It is, however, only fair to state that the vessel is the first of its kind, and so far is only experimental.—Scottish American Journal.

Byron.

Byron was the most notorious personality in the world of letters of our century. Nearly every one who crossed his path has left on record various impressions of intimacy or interview. Those whom he avoided or patronized, like Leigh Hunt, maligned him; those to whom he was genial and kindly, like Moore, Shelly, and Harness, loved him. A man whose passions disdained restraint, frank upon matters about which other men keep silent, loving to make himself out worse than he really was, of great genius and biting wit, proud of his birth, at war throughout his life with a world which had been unjust to him, secretive, unhappy, and slightly tinged with insanity, such was Byron, one of the greatest poets that England or any other country has ever produced. "He is a person of the most consummate genius," said Shelly, "and capable, if he would direct his energies to such an end, of becoming the redeemer of his degraded country. But it is his weakness to be proud; he derives from a comparison of his own extraordinary mind with the dwarfish intellects that surround him, an intense apprehension of the nothingness of human life. His passions and his powers are incomparably greater than those of other men; and instead of the latter having been employed in curbing the former, they have mutually lent each other strength. But in social life no human being can be more gentle, patient, and unassuming. He is cheerful, frank and witty. His more serious conversation is a sort of intoxication; "men are held by it as by a spell." So much for the man. As to his work, the poetry of Byron is among the most sublime in the language. He is the Napoleon of the realms of rhyme. His works were the events of the literary world, and were translated into every language in Europe.

Lord Macaulay declares that Byron was the most celebrated Englishman in the nineteenth century. Goethe urged Eckermann to study English in order to read "Cain" and "Childe Harold." "The audacity and grandeur of Byron," said the author of Faust, "must certainly tend towards culture. We should take care not to be always looking for it in the decidedly pure and moral. Everything that is great promotes cultivation as soon as we are aware of it.... Byron issues from the sea-waves ever fresh. I could not make use of any man as the representative of the modern poetic era except him who is undoubtedly to be regarded as the greatest genius of our century." Castelar, in Spain Mazzini in Italy, Sainte Beuve in France and Else in Germany, all sing the praise of Byron, classing him with the greatest of English poets. Such concurrent testimony cannot be set aside.

Byron was often rapid and slovenly in his verse; he was an improvisatore on the spot where his fancy was kindled; his best inspirations are frequently spoilt by the interruption of incongruous commonplace; he did not pretend to originality—who in a late age can be original?—but he made all he borrowed his own by re-casting the rough ore into bell-metal. Still, with all his faults, he stands second to none in the beauty of his descriptions of scenery, in his knowledge of the human heart as evinced by his satires, and in the swing and rhyme of his verse. His work is neither perfect architecture nor fine mosaic, but like that of his intellectual ancestors, the elder Elizabethans, whom he perversely maligned, it is all animated by the spirit of action and enterprise.—Westminster Review.

Women's Names.

[NOTES AND QUERIES.]

Annabella is not Anne-bella, or Fair Ann, but is the feminine of Hannibal, meaning gift (or grace) of Bel. Arabella is not Ara-bella, or beautiful altar, but Orabilia, a praying woman. In its Anglicized form of Orabel, it was much more common in the thirteenth century than at present. Maurice has nothing to do with Mauritius, or a Moor, but comes from Amalric—himmel reich—the kingdom of heaven. Elleu is the feminine of Alain, Alan, or Allan, and has no possible connection with Helen, which comes from a different language and is older by about a thousand years at least. Amy is not from aimee, but from amie. Avice, or Avis, does not exactly mean advice, as some seem to think. It comes from Æd-wise, and means happy wisdom. Eliza has no connection with Elizabeth. It is the sister of Louisa, and both are the daughters of Heloise, which is Hele-wise, hidden wisdom. There is, indeed, another form of Louisa, or rather Louise, which is the feminine of Louis, but this was scarcely heard of before the sixteenth century. The older Heloise form of the name, Alosias, Aloisia, or Aloysia, was adopted into mediæval English, as Alesia—a name which our old genealogists always confuse with Alice. Emily and Amelia are not different forms of one name. Emily is from Æmylia, the name of an Etruscan gens. Amelia comes from the Gothic amala—heavenly. Reginald is not derived from Regina, and has nothing to do with a Queen. It is Rein-alt—exalted purity. Alice, Adelais, Adelaid, Alisa, Alix, Adeline, are all forms of one name, the root of which is adel—noble. But Anne was never used as identical with Annis, or Agnes (of which last the old Scottish Annas is a variety,) nor, as I sturdily maintain, was Elizabeth ever synonymous with Isabel.—Christian at Work.

A Word to Our Readers.

When you read of a remedy that will cure all diseases beware of it; but when you read of a pure vegetable compound which claims to cure only certain parts of the body, and furnishes high proof that it does this, you can safely try it and with the assurance that it will help you. This is just what Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure does. It cures all troubles of the lower portion of the body and none others. It will not help the tooth-ache, ear-ache nor consumption but it will put your body in a vigorous and healthy state where you can enjoy life and appreciate its good things. Try it.

Ayer's

Hair Vigor,

FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS NATURAL VITALITY AND COLOR.

It is a most agreeable dressing, which is at once harmless and effectual, for preserving the hair. It restores, with the gloss and freshness of youth, faded or gray, light, and red hair, to a rich brown, or deep black, as may be desired. By its use thin hair is thickened, and baldness often though not always cured. It checks falling of the hair immediately, and causes a new growth in all cases where the glands are not decayed; while to brashy, weak, or otherwise diseased hair, it imparts vitality and strength, and renders it pliable.

The VIGOR cleanses the scalp, cures and prevents the formation of dandruff; and, by its cooling, stimulating, and soothing properties, it heals most if not all of the humors and diseases peculiar to the scalp, keeping it cool, clean, and soft, under which conditions diseases of the scalp and hair are impossible.

As a Dressing for Ladies' Hair

The VIGOR is incomparable. It is colorless, contains neither oil nor dye, and will not soil white cambric. It imparts an agreeable and lasting perfume, and as an article for the toilet it is economical and unsurpassed in its excellence.

EXTRACTS FROM A YOUNG LADY'S LETTERS HOME.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 28, 1880.

I have so much to tell you that I am at a loss how to begin.

As you say, objections are plentiful, and I don't wan't to fill up my letters with them; yet it is very hard to avoid using them in every line, and in the superlative degree at that.

We left Washington yesterday at 8 o'clock, and arrived here about half-past 1. Trees and houses and fields raced by as we flew towards Baltimore. The trains go at such speed that it is impossible to distinguish objects. We crossed Baltimore harbor on a ferry boat without leaving the cars. Prof. K. was waiting for us, and as soon as we had brushed the dust off, he took us to the Presbyterian Board of Publication building, where they held a reception last week for the members of the Council. We went all over that great book store. How it made my mouth water!

* * * * *

Then to the Music Hall, or Opera House, where the Council was in session. It was a grand sight. The hall was a very fine one, to begin with—circular, of course,—with three tiers of galleries, tinted walls, immense glass chandeliers, gilded fresco work, and though it was broad daylight ouside, it was brilliantly lit up with gas. Between three and four thousand persons present. Prof. K. being a delegate, took us upon the platform, where all the dignitaries were, and where we had a good view of the whole. Imagine that great assembly singing "Coronation," and as a finishing touch to the delight, think they were all Presbyterians. Those grand old white-haired ministers from foreign lands: there they were from Scotland and Ireland and England, from France, from India, from Spain, from the South Sea Islands, from Canada, and actually from Tasmania. Think of ten thousand Presbyterians in Van Dieman's Land! The Hindoo delegate, Rev. Mr. Sheshadri, a dark-skinned, fine looking man, in his white turban and national costume, was a striking figure, but I have heard since that the gentleman from Africa, as black and as ugly as Ben Booth, of Chapel Hill, was a better speaker than the dignified Oriental, made a finer address, and impressed the Assembly more. Everything that was said by everybody impressed me, however. I was in a state of unmingled delight and glorification all the time. I am chockful of Presbyterianism.

It was such an addition to the pleasure to see our North Carolina ministers and Southern friends there. They were all like home-folks to me.

When we came out Prof. K. took me to Wannamaker's. That store is fairyland. The main building at the Centennial is the only thing I can compare it to. We waited to see it lit up with the electric light. It is just like daylight, and shines round you in a second. The gas beside it looks like poor pale little tallow candles would beside the gas. * * * Well, I spent a fortune there, buying something for everybody at home.

* * * * *

At night, after dinner, we were again at Music Hall, and enjoyed extremely the excellent addresses, continued from the morning.

Soon after breakfast next day, Prof. K. took me down Chesnut street. The stores are simply gorgeous—magnificent. I can't say any more than that, and I want both of those adjectives to use right over again to describe the new City Hall. Philadelphia is certainly a noble city, and the Philadelphian's are showing a superb hospitality. Nothing has been omitted that they could do. Their guests must go away to sing their praises all round the world.

Horticultural Hall, where the Council meets in the morning, has been very elaborately and magnificiently decorated for the occasion. The walls, and immense columns and windows, are wreathed and covered with festoons of evergreens and flags, and old historic banners and shields and arms, and the seals of the foreign churches: Scotland's shield in blue, covered with gold thistles, and the seal of the Church, "The Burning Bush;" Ireland's shield in green, with gold shamrocks and the Church seal like Scotland's; England's shield of scarlet, sprinkled with gold roses, and her Presbyterian Church's seal, a double circle with a dove; Holland's shield, orange and blue, and her seal a lily set among thorns. The Waldensian Church seal is a golden candlestick with seven gilt stars.

But I cannot attempt to describe it all. The whole scene was dazzling. The scrolls, and tablets, and mottoes, and historical allusions and dates required more knowledge of the history of our Church than I possess to even understand them all, much less attempt to give an account of. * * * It was wonderful to see what spirit and taste had been shown in such lavish and soul-stirring decorations. I have seen it stated that it was all mainly due to the exertions of one gentleman.

We heard another fine address from Dr. Cairns. I love to look at his English face, his broad forehead and snow-white hair. And this fine old man loves a joke, too; it was not all massive sense and sound doctrine. Their fun was good, but it was better fun to me to watch them and enjoy seeing them enjoy the occasion so heartily.

* * * * *

NEW YORK, Oct. 2, 1880.

I felt decidedly lonesome when Prof. K. put me on the train for New York, and I came whirling off all by myself, without a friendly face on the train and full of conjectures as to what I should do if no one met me at Jersey City. The New Jersey woods were putting on their autumnal colors. As I walked forlornly in the crowd on the platform, I saw Dr. L. looking for me. No friend's face was ever more cheering.

We were soon in a cab, and on the boat and over the river, and in Clinton Place. Miss L. was waiting for me. How many good people there are in this world.

* * * * *

October 4th.—Friday morning, Dr. L. came according to promise and took me round to Cooper Union and introduced me to the principal of the Woman's Art Department, Mrs. Carter. About forty ladies were assembled for the normal class. This begins at the beginning of course. As at other normal schools, if you join a class, no matter how much you may feel that you already know, you must go on with your class. * * * The drawing is from casts and models altogether. Copying from a flat surface is nothing accounted of. Lessons in oil-painting are not given at present, but you can employ your afternoons with it if you choose to take private lessons. That I shall certainly do. * * * I am very glad of this drill in drawing. We are expected to be in our places at 9 a. m. The hall I work in is partitioned off into alcoves, each one large enough for half a dozen girls and their easels, models, &c. My easel is in front of a window that looks out on Fourth avenue. Pretty soon after we commence work the drawing master appears, sits down before each easel and criticises. With two or three bold strokes he corrects the drawing if necessary, but his strokes are only meant as hints. You always have to erase them. I have an octagonal block to draw and shade. I have drawn it in every possible position.

* * * * *

October 8th.—I have found out one thing since I left home. Whatever you learn to do well you will have occasion to use some day. The drill of reporting our Union Normal School lectures has just prepared me nicely for taking notes here.

* * * * *

I get back to my boarding house at half-past 1 p. m., and have my solitary lunch and read my letters if any have arrived. Then, being free for the day, I am going to go out as much as possible for a few weeks, before I settle down to regular afternoon work.

From the windows of my room I can see the towers of Dr. Deems' "Church of the Strangers," and the gray stone battlements of New York University. The Presbyterian Theological Seminary is only a block off, and Stewart's store about as far. All night it seems to me I hear the roar of the great city rising all around.

* * * * *

Last Sunday we heard Dr. Hall preach. How grand the singing is in these great congregations. The first hymn was dear old "Come thou Fount." I enjoyed the sermon greatly, and the whole service, but especially the prayers. When we came out the crowd was so dense we could not raise our parasols for several blocks. * * * We walked through the new Roman Catholic Cathedral on our way home. I never saw anything like it, of course. Carved stone and stained glass: it is all superb. When we reached home we had walked 56 squares, nearly three miles. But three miles on pavements is nothing to any one raised in Orange county and accustomed to walking out with President B.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

DR. HEPBURN'S DAVIDSON COLLEGE SPEECH AT SYNOD.

Whether right or wrong, Davidson has been hiding its light, and when Dr. Hepburn not only took the bushel off, but put the light on as good a "candle stick" as the rostrum of the Synod of North Carolina, "it gave light," clear and brig't, "to all that were in the house." All were surprised at the brightness of the light, all approved the official removing of the bushel by the official representative of the college. And it was especially fitting that it should be done in this part of the State, as Dr. Hepburn and his colleagues got but little patronage from any point east of Greensboro, chiefly from ignorance of the merits of the instruction offered, which is somebody's fault, but not mine.

For some years past I have taken the ground, in season and out of season, that in my opinion Davidson, as it is now, is the best manned curriculum college south of the Potomac. When asked why I think so, I say, that I have taken occasion frequently to make inquiries of Davidson students as to the character of the work done there now; I have inspected the working of the college myself, my nephew spent two years, and one of my present faculty, one year there; so that from the concurrent testimony of others as well as of my own knowledge I say that I know the faculty to be comparatively young men, and to be vigerous and successful and professional teachers; and farther that Davidson is the only college in the State, and up to a very recent date the only one in the South that has, or has ever had, teachers of European culture.

Some have met the assertion with an incredulous smile, some with surprise; and I have often had a man to say, "You must be mistaken, the faculty are old fogies, I can't find anything about any European culture in the catalogue, in any newspaper advertisement, or any official statement of the status of the college. You must be mistaken." I have even been told that the college had been, and probably would continue to be a sort of infirmary for disabled preachers.

This misapprehension probably originated from conditions which, whether correctly or incorrectly, were supposed to have existed formerly, but which, if they ever did exist, have most certainly ceased now. But I must say, that those who manage the college seem to me not to have done themselves or the public justice, in not having stated the facts of the case in their catalogues and elsewhere, in not having "taken off the bushel" so to speak before, as Dr. Hepburn did so effectively in his speech at Synod. I would like to say something about several points made in this most excellent speech, but having committed myself freely to the assertion that Davidson as it is now is the best manned college south of the Potomac, I shall confine myself to two points only, bearing upon this idea: 1st, The culture of the Faculty, and 2nd the tests of their work.

1st. Let us look at the culture of the Davidson Faculty. The University of Virginia is represented by Profs. Hepburn, Martin, Latimer, Sampson, and C. M. Hepburn.

Washington and Lee University is represented by Prof. Carson, whom, by the way, Gen. R. E. Lee expressed his preference for as Col. Allen's successor in Washington and Lee University.

The University of Georgia is represented by Prof. Blake, of the Department of Natural Philosophy and Astronomy; whose learning as a professor and whose power as a lecturer were so admirably illustrated by his very able lecture on the "Sunbeam," which we at Bingham's enjoyed so much some years ago.

Davidson College is represented by Prof. C. M. Hepburn only.—(They have done no "in and in breeding" at Davidson.)

Columbia College, New York, School of Mines, is represented by Prof. Carson. A special school of modern languages, Paris, is represented by Prof. Sampson. The University of Berlin, (Germany), is represented by Prof. Hepburn. The University of Leipzig, is represented by Prof. Latimer, who has just received his Ph. D. from there, and by Prof. Sampson. The University of Gottingen is represented by Prof. Sampson.

Two of the faculty Profs. Hepburn and Martin, have been connected with a State institution in North Carolina, (the University) and one, Prof. Hepburn, with a State institution outside of North Carolina. Other colleges may be represented and I think they are, but I have not the facts.

Thus, the faculty represent five Colleges and Universities of the highest grade in America and four in Europe, three of them being Berlin, Leipzig and Gottingen, and I think that Heidelberg is represented too; and two have experience gained in and out of North Carolina. The oldest member of the faculty is under fifty. But two are preachers at all, and whatever they do about preaching, they teach with their right hands.

In view of these facts, some of which Prof. Hepburn stated publicly, and some privately. What becomes of the "old fogy" or of the "infirmary" idea?

As far as I know, no other institution of learning of any grade in the South, not even the University of Virginia, I believe, can show such breadth of culture in its teachers. No college in North Carolina except Davidson ever had a Professor of European culture as far as I know. The University of North Carolina has had one for a month, now for the first time I think. Wofford College, South Carolina, has had one for a while. The University of Louisiana has just secured Prof. R. Sharp, a Leipzig Ph. D., late of Bingham school. If there are any others I do not know it.

So that Davidson is, and has for some time been, preeminent among Southern colleges in this most important respect, to wit.: the broad and thorough culture of its teachers.

2nd. Let us look at some of the tests of their work. As might be expected the work done bears the severest tests. The Professors at Union and Columbia Theological Seminaries say that the Davidson students are their best trained pupils. Again Dr. Burney, now of the South Carolina University (the only North Carolina born Ph. D. from a German University I think by the way) went from Col. Martin's laboratory to Bunsen's, the greatest living chemist, and found himself fully prepared for the great Heidelberg professor's teaching, and better prepared, he assures his friends, than many German students from their own gymnasia. Again, Dr. Hepburn said that the prize papers, in the various classes and departments, have been sent from time to time among others, to Prof. Gildersleeve of Johns Hopkins, (now the greatest Greek scholar among English speaking men,) Prof. Humphreys, of Vanderbilt; Prof. Morris, of Johns Hopkins; Prof. Peters, of University of Virginia; Prof. Allen, late of Washington and Lee; and to the Professor of Mathematics at Princeton, and those distinguished scholars and teachers have been unanimous in expressing their surprise at, and admiration of the accuracy and scholarship exhibited.

And again, such a zeal for learning is being inspired that of the numerous colleges and universities whose graduates are at Johns Hopkins, the most advanced school of learning in America, Harvard, Yale, the University of Virginia, and Davidson have, Dr. Hepburn said, the largest number and the same number of representatives.

With these facts made public and kept before the public, all must admit that among southern curriculum colleges, Davidson, as constituted now, stands pre-eminent in the culture of its faculty. R. B.

HAPPY MOTHERS.

I might say, rather, cheerful mothers, but I do not, because there is no real sunshiny cheerfulness possible without happiness in the heart. And there may be happiness, if the heart be rightly placed and strong in love and faith, even when the outlook in life is dark, and the clouds upon the path are heavy. There may be little money in the purse. There may be a dear one lying pallid on the couch, and fading by degrees. There may be a narrow grave in the cemetery, and a vacant seat at the table. But yet, my sister, if Christ be your friend, abiding with you and holding fast your hand, there may be a strange gladness mingled with your sorrow.

We all want our little children to be happy. Now the happiest children are those who have happy mothers. The young life, which grows up in the shadow of a discontented, repining and gloomy mother, is like a plant unwatered by kindly dews. It is apt to be dwarfed and stunted. So, even when things are crooked, and temptations to ungentleness and unhappiness come, let the mother, for her sons' and daughters sake, try to be happy. —Margaret E. Sangster.

ONE DAY'S GLEANING.

BY REV. OLIVER CRANE, M D.

"Where hast thou gleaned to-day."—Ruth ii: 19.

O gleaner, who homeward as if in retreat,
Art moodily wending thy way;
Thou hast seemingly wrought in the dust and the heat,
But why bringest thou no bundle of wheat?
O where hast thou gleaned to-day?

I have all day long, in the wearisome toil,
Been gleaning but stubble and hay;
I have wearily wrought on a barren soil,
Where the elements seemed my endeavor to foil—
I have gleaned in the desert to-day.

O gleaner, who comest as if from the field,
Where the sheaves in abundance lay,
O what by thy dilligent hand is the yield,
And why is it close in thy mantle concealed—
O where hast thou gleaned to-day?

I have come from the fields where the harvesters throng,
By the brook and the great highway;
I have flitted from field to field along,
And have listened to many a reapers song—
I have gleaned with the rovers to-day.

From the harvests that wave as the Master's pride,
How returnest thou, gleaner, away?
With the earliest dawn thou hast thitherward hied,
But what bringest thou back at the eventide—
O where hast thou gleaned to-day?

I have come from the fields in the harvested plain,
Where the reapers are happy and gay;
But the reapers are harvesting all the grain,
And the song that they sing is their own refrain—
I have gleaned with the gleaners to-day.

O gleaner, who comest with arms well filled,
As if gleaning where armfuls lay,
O where is the joy that thy bosom has thrilled,
As if joining the song that the harvester's trilled—
O where hast thou gleaned to-day?

I have gleaned in the field where the Master assigned,
And have stayed where he bade me stay;
Where the Owner and reapers alike were kind,
And permitted me many a sheaf to find—
I have gleaned with the reapers to-day.

MAKE THE BEST OF THINGS.

We excuse a man for an occasional depression, just as we endure a rainy day. But who could endure three hundred and sixty-five days of cold drizzle? Yet there are men who are, without cessation, sombre and charged with evil prognostication. We may be born with a melancholy temperament, but that is no reason why we should yield to it. There is a way of shuffling the burden. In the lottery of life there are more prizes drawn than blanks, and to one misfortune there are fifty advantages. Despondency is the most unprofitable feeling a man can have. One good laugh is a bombshell exploding in the right place, while spleen and discontent is a gun that kicks over the man that shoots it off. Let us stand off from despondencies. Listen for sweet notes rather than discords. In a world where God has put an exquisite tinge upon the shell washed in the surf, and planted a paradise of bloom in a child's cheek, let us leave it to the owl to hoot, and the toad to croak, and the fault-finder to complain. Take out-door exercise and avoid late suppers, if you would have a cheerful disposition. The habit of complaint finally drops into peevishness and people become waspish and unapproachable.—Baptist Weekly.

TRUST IN GOD.

Happy for us if, in spite of all we see and experience that tends to impair it, we are able to maintain an unwavering confidence in God, in his goodness, in his fatherly care and love for us. But sad indeed is the case of that man who allows his personal wrongs and misfortunes, or his observation of the temporary success of wicked men, to destroy his confidence in God. Yet this will be the case with us all if we interpret God by the contradictions of evil we see in the world, or think of Him as in any way responsible for them. Even David's trust in God was greatly shaken in view of "the prosperity of the wicked," and the "many afflictions of the righteous," insomuch that his "feet were almost gone," and his "steps had well-nigh slipped." It was not until he "went into the sanctuary of God," and "understood their end," that he was able to say: "Truly God is good to Israel, even to such as are of a clean heart." So if we would maintain confidence in the goodness and justice of God, we must bear in mind that men alone are responsible for the wrongs and injustice that we see; that in spite of all appearances to the contrary, God is ruling the world in righteousness, and that all the attributes of his character are pledged to secure the ultimate triumph of right over wrong. The Judge of all the earth will do right.

But the greatest hindrance to an availing trust in God is neither a lack of confidence in Him, nor the sight of this world's injustice, but the want of conscious conformity to His will. "Not the course of this world, but the weakness of ourselves makes it difficult to trust in the Lord with all our hearts." It is when our sins come between us and God and hide from us the light of His countenance that we lose confidence, not in His goodness, but in His exercising that goodness toward us. And there is truth in what we feel, for we rightly judge that our wrong-doing has taken us away from Him. We must know that our purposes and life are in harmony with the will of God in order to derive any strength or comfort from our confidence in Him.—Northwestern Advocate.

THE CONFLICT.

There is a conflict that only ends with the end of life. "So fight I," said the stout old Great Heart of the Apostles; "not as one that beateth the air." With sturdy blows he beats down his grosser sinful nature, striking it under the eye. Paul adopts the phrase of the boxers, and tells us that he smote his carnal nature until he made it "black and blue." All which proves to us that Paul, being neither a phrenologist nor a perfectionist, had to battle with his rebel lusts and passions—until he left them outside of the gate of heaven. Every one of us who hopes to reach that same heaven must wage the same conflict. Some sins grow weaker as we advance in the divine life; others are more peculiar to old age. The war which the Christian wages must be unsparing and unending—giving no quarter to a single foe. The frequent insurrections of bad temper, the sly whispers of envy, the hateful spirit of jealousy, and greedy clutch of covetousness, the subtle sophistries of selfishness, the restless cravings of ambition, the unclean appetites of the flesh, the smooth-tongued devil of self-righteousness, the wicked spirit of unbelief—all these make up a rebel army which never allows any quiet. He who would keep a clean conscience and a godly life must wage this warfare every day without compromise and without quarter.—Rev. Dr. T. L. Cuyler.

A PROMISE FULFILLED.

When the late Dr. W. S. Plumer was pastor of a church in Richmond, Va., he promised a lady then, that he would remain there till he went to heaven. After he went to Baltimore and became pastor of a church there, the lady reminded him of his promise. He replied that "he concluded to go to heaven by the way of Baltimore." So providentially after several removals, he was brought again to Baltimore to die.

"AGONIZING" PRAYER.

The phrase is a common one in many quarters; the idea which it represents is ingrained in not a little of Christian thought. But we are persuaded that the phrase is an unfortunate one, and that the idea thus presented is foreign to the true nature of prayer.

Perhaps the best definition of prayer is that given in the familiar hymn:

"Prayer is the soul's sincere desire,
Uttered or unexpressed;
The motion of a hidden fire
That trembles in the breast."

Prayer is communion with God. It includes adoration, confession, petition. Prayer has its power, not in its reflex influence upon him who prays, but in the fact that God is the Hearer and Answerer of prayer. No doubt prayer has its reflex influence. It claims and elevates the soul to lift it up in converse with Him who is "eternal immortal, invisible." But prayer would be poor indeed if it did not bring positive blessings from God, answers of peace to the asking soul. It is in the faith that God can grant us our desires, and that He will grant them if He sees it to be for the best that we pray. True faith rests the decision of the matter upon God's wisdom and infinite love.

For example: my child is very dangerously ill; the gravest fears are entertained for his life. In what attitude of mind shall I approach God to ask for his recovery? Shall I "agonize" in prayer, as the phrase goes? I may be in an agony of mind, dreading the hour, apparently fast approaching, when I must part with the one so dear to me. But has that agony any virtue in God's sight? Is His action to be conditioned by my state of mind in that regard, or is it to be in accordance with what His infinite wisdom sees to be for the best for all concerned? I may be well-nigh overwhelmed with grief at the thought of the death of the loved child. But my prayer ought to be saturated with the feeling, "Not my will, but thine, O Lord, be done." That is the triumph of faith—to believe, not that the particular thing that we desire shall come to us, but that whatever God does will be best. Truly believing prayer cradles us in the strong arms of Everlasting Love. Sighs and groans and tears, bodily anguish, hours of prostration on the ground—these things do not avail with God. Such things are more fitly characteristic of the heathen devotee than of the Christian believer.

That prayer should be earnest is evident on the very face of the matter. But earnestness is to be measured by the faith exercised, and not by any merely external signs. The most earnest preacher, to illustrate from another sphere of Christian activity, is not necessarily the one who uses the loudest voice. That is a matter of lungs and physical habit. Do I really feel the need of God's ever-present help and care? Do I take not only these things I hold so dear, but all concernments of my life to Him? Do I depend upon Him for daily grace and strength? These are the questions to be regarded. There is no virtue, in itself considered, in remaining long hours in prayer. That is not of necessity the best prayer-meeting in which the tide of manifested emotion has run the highest. The truly earnest Christian man may commend himself and all he loves to the watch of his heavenly Father, and then lie calmly down to rest, and be just as sure of being heard as if he should spend the silent hours in calling vehemently upon God. There may be seasons, indeed, when we feel that we must, hour after hour, remain talking with God. But God hears us because of our faith, and not because of the time, longer or shorter, that we spend in petition.

Dr. Crosby, in his book, "The Christian Preacher," speaking of those who from the incident of Jacob at the ford of Jabbok teach the doctrine of "wrestling" in prayer, says: "These interpreters forget that Jacob got nothing at Peniel but a broken leg by his wrestling, but that when he ceased wrestling and held on prayer, his petition was granted, and he had power with God." This presents the whole case most tersely and vigorously. It is not upon the emotional condition of our mind that God's answer to our prayer depends. He answers by giving or withholding as seems to be best. It is no small part of the value of prayer that I may thus summon to my aid the resources of infinite wisdom. Agony of mind says: "Give me this, this, only this, Lord." Assured faith says: "Lord, give only that which thou seest to be best.—Illustrated Christian Weekly.

WANTED—A MINISTER

A correspondent of the Congregationalist puts at the head of his article "Wanted—A Minister," and discourses thus: "A talented man—a powerful and brilliant preacher, whose sermons shall be neither too long nor too short. A young man preferred, who shall bring the actual experience of a long pastorate. We do not wish to get a pastor away from another church, but we want a man who has not left his 'last place,' and who does not desire to. This is important; for if a candidate appears who has recently left a charge, or desires to, we are suspicious that there is something wrong about him. We want a good-looking man, features regular, carriage dignified. Size—this is important—he must be of full stature, for our church is new, and the pulpit furnished heavy, and a good height and full number of pounds avoirdupois are essential, that the minister correspond with the surroundings. He must be scrupulously careful regarding his dress. One candidate was not liked recently because his necktie was tied a little on one side. It was felt that this was not accidental, 'for it was just so in the afternoon.' We want a spiritually-minded man—one anxious and earnest in the salvation of souls, but he must be very discreet, and never say anything to hurt any one's feelings. He must never forget the dignity of his office. As a church we are well-to-do, but when it comes to the question of salary we are economical. Parsonage none. For eight years and more we have been praying for a pastor, and at last we feel obliged to advertise. Address Congregational Church, Mass."

HE DRINKS.

Tell me a young man drinks, and I know the rest. Let him become captive to the wine-cup, and he is the captive to all other vices. No man ever runs drunkenness alone. That is one of the carrion crows that goes in a flock. If that break is ahead you may know the other breaks that follow. In other words, strong drink unbalances and dethrones, and makes him the prey of all the appetites that choose to alight upon his soul. There is not a place of sin upon this continent but finds its chief abettor in the places of inebriety. There is a drinking place before it, or behind it, or a bar over it, or a bar under it. The officer said to me that night, "You see how they escape legal penalty; they are licensed to sell liquor." Then I thought within myself, the court that licenses the sale of intoxicating liquors, licenses gaming houses, licenses libertinism, licenses diseases, licenses death, licenses all crimes, all sufferings, all disasters, all woes. It is the Legislature and Courts who swing wide open the grinding, roaring, stupendous gate of the lost.—Talmage.

WHY WOMEN NEED FAITH.

The strength of women lies in their heart. It shows itself in their strong love and instinctive perception of right and wrong. Intellectual courage is rarely one of their virtues. As a rule, they are inclined to be restless and excitable, allowing their judgments and actions to be swayed by quick emotions of all kinds, but above all, it is in their hopefulness and their endurance that they find their chief power. Who is the last person to give up hope in the case of a member of the family who has apparently gone altogether to the bad? What mother or sister with deep and ardent love for such will ever cease to cherish hope or endure suffering on their account? The patience of women is proverbial, and their whole lives are bound up in their affections. Few people will deny that love in one form or another makes up the beauty of life to woman. It enters into all she does. Any work outside her immediate circle is undertaken most often from pure desire to help some one else to know something of the mysterious happiness of love.—Mrs. Salisbury in Nineteenth Century.

Never give way to melancholy. One great remedy is to take short views of life. Are you happy now? Are you likely to remain so till this evening, or next week, or next month, or next year? RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from Exchanges:

The new President of San Domingo is a priest named Merino. He promised in his inaugural message to cultivate friendly relations with neighboring States.

Another Roman Catholic priest, the Abbe de Riegy, has gone over to the new faith of Hyacinthe Loyson. This is said to be the third French priest converted to the Gallican Church during the past month.

Two more Hittite inscriptions have been discovered. They have been found by Col. Wilson, on a rock at Ghurun, where the Euphrates issues forth into the plain below, through a narrow gorge, six feet wide.

It is proposed to erect a statue at Zurich, Switzerland, in honor of the reformer Zwingle. Eleven thousand dollars have already been subscribed, and it is suggested that on on the 1st of January, 1884, the four hundredth anniversary of his birth, the statue be unveiled.

An anonymous gift of $50,000 has been made to the fund for the Melbourne (Australia) Cathedral. It is intended that the edifice shall be the grandest one in that part of the world, and one which will compare favorably with the costliest churches in any Protestant country.

The Bishop of Vittoria has resigned his episcopal office, declaring "that his efforts to quell the spirit of his clergy had failed, and he was also much paralyzed by the numerous convents and Jesuits institutions in the north of Spain selected as refugees by the congregations expelled from France."

Several Ritualistic clergymen in England, having in mind the Oberammergan Passion Play, have determined to represent the Passion on the white sheet. The chancel gives them the very arrangement they would desire. They can place the magic lantern near the altar and erect a sheet where the rood screen might be. The choir, retaining their places, sing hymns during the performance. The priest gives an explanation from the pulpit, like a reader at the Polytechnic. This is an entirely new phase of "Church and Stage."

The annual meetings of the Baptist Union of Scotland were held in Glasgow last week. Rev. Wm. Grant, Edinburgh, was appointed president for the year. From the secretary's report it appeared that there were eighty affiliated churches in the Union, with an aggregate membership of 8539. The total receipts for the year, including balance on hand, amounted to £1270, and after payment of disbursements there was a balance of £46, which was carried forward to next account.

The Archbishop of York, preaching on Tuesday at the opening of Sheffield parish church, made special reference to the presence of many Nonconformists at the services. The Archbishop said: "Nonconformists have compromised nothing in coming here to-day to worship in the house of their fathers. They carry off somewhat of public respect by doing so, and their own self-respect will be in no way lessened. They kneel here and their thoughts go back to times when Nonconformists had little or no existence. I would that those times would come again, but we shall never see them.

Mr. Biggart, of Dalry whose death occurred lately at Kirkland House, Dalry, Scotland, was a liberal benefactor of the U. P. Church, of which he was an elder. In furtherance of its various schemes he has given about £20,000, and bestowed liberally upon objects not sectarian. Among the most prominent of his numerous benevolent acts were the gift of £6,000 to Glasgow University for bursaries for all students; the gift of £5,000 for students attending the U. P. Theological Hall, and the purchase of the late Dr. Eadie's library for the new Synod buildings in Edinburgh. At the time of his death Mr. Biggart was expending additional sums for the fitting reception of the library in the new hall.

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1880.

THE IRISH TROUBLES.

Affairs in Ireland grow rapidly worse as time rolls on, and if the hold which such agitators as Parnall possess upon the Irish peasantry is not vastly overstated there would seem to be no recourse to the government of Great Britain but to restore quiet by the mailed hand of military power.

In any intelligent consideration of the Irish question the impulsive disposition and the improvident habits of the people are to be taken into the account. Through the whole course of Irish history, from the days of Cromwell and even before, the spirit of unrest has made this people at times the victims of the Romish priests, oftener perhaps of unprincipled agitators and yet oftener still perhaps of both combined. Reference is made of course, to Roman Catholic Ireland, for it is in the Romish districts that lawlessness runs riot, as it is in those districts almost exclusively that from time to time famine prevails. The government of Great Britain is charged by the Irish people(Roman Catholic Ireland)with whatever ills may afflict their unhappy country, yet that government has always been anxious to promote the welfare of Ireland. No disinterested student of history can fail to note the efforts that have been steadily made to improve by legislation the condition of the country, nor yet fail to note that each successive act of relief has been followed by fresh and more vehement discontent. So too in those fearful seasons of famine the government and the English people have expended their means for relief with a lavish hand, During the famine from failure of the potato crop in 1846-47 the government advanced seven millions of pounds, and associations and individuals expended in relief nearly a million more.

Not less than this would it be just to say of Great Britain. Yet Irelond is cursed with a heavy curse in its landlordism, a curse intensified by the selfish madness of unprincipled demagogues and the shortsightedness —yes the insanity of their followers. The land tenure problem is held to be the immediate cause of the present discontent, yet this removed will Ireland be content? Parnall declares that it will not, that agitation on this subject is only a means to secure the repeal of the union and secure the absolute independence of Ireland.

The failure of the "Compensation for Disturbance" bill in the House of Lords, looking as it did to a correction of abuses in the system of land tenure, was doubtless unfortunate, but this failure cannot justify the highhanded measures, the murders and the general terrorism, for which it is made the pretext.

To present to our readers an intelligent view of Irish land tenure we copy at length the following clear and unimpassioned article from the Scottish American Journal:

"The difficulty of Ireland is not traceable to distinction of race, as has been asserted by some Irish newspapers that are not particular about accuracy of fact. Under a just and wise system of land tenure the Irish people would be as contented as it is possible for the Irish to be. They have the right to expect a better land system, just as England or Scotland have the right to remedy, by legislation, the state of existing evils. Before describing the system of land tenure in Ireland we wish to show the practice of land tenure in Scotland, where if not absolutely perfect, it is as nearly so as in any part of the world.

"In Scotland the agricultural farm must consist of a sufficient acreage to yield the tenant a working profit. The tenant must have the necessary amount of skill and capital to enter upon it, and he must be ensured possession for a reasonable number of years. His capital and skill are security to the landlord; the stated term of possession is a security to the tenant. At the landlord's cost the farm must by proper drainage, fencing and roads, and the erection of suitable dwelling-houses, cottages for laborers, and offices of various kinds, be put into a workable condition. The tenant, therefore, these being secured, enters on his lease, commences upon his agricultural pursuits, and in due season pays his stipulated rent. No permanent improvements are expected from him, and if he makes them he can prefer no claim, if he has not already stipulated in his lease that he is to receive compensation therefor. If he has done any large amount of damage he must make it good. At the close of the lease the outgoing tenant leaves things as he found them, and the only claim he can legally make of the incoming tenant is for payment of the crop in the ground. Such a thing as selling the good-will of a farm is unknown in Scotland. This system imposes heavy duties on the landlord, which he accepts because it is customary. So clearly are the mutual obligations between landlord and tenant defined that disputes rarely arise. If the landlord cannot fulfil the conditions he enters upon he must borrow money, or sell out. If the tenant fails to pay regularly, his household effects can be distrained for rent. Here, therefore, the relative responsibilities are clearly set forth.

"In Ireland the system is almost reversed. The cost for all improvements is thrown upon the tenant, who has but a precarious occupancy.

"In writing to the London Times recently, an Irish correspondent says:—"All buildings, fences, farm roads, surface improvements, and the drainage connected with Irish landed property, are the investments of the tenants. Even where the landlord borrows money for drainage purposes from the Board of Works the tenant is made to repay, in the shape of increased rent, and is, therefore, the person who has made the expenditure in the end." Under such a system little else could be expected, when it is understood that several landlords, having hundreds of small tenants could not provide them all with dwellings, and, therefore, they perforce construct them for themselves. The adjustment for these outlays in the rent gives rise to petty and vexatious disputes, and are the constant source of entanglements and litigation. Such practice is inconsistent with sound land tenure. Herein may be found the primary cause of the troubles of Ireland.

"The small tenure system began in the desperate struggle for existence in which tenants hid one against the other for their respective holdings, very often paying excessive prices out of all proportion to the true value of the land. And thus the system has gone beyond endurance, hastened by the multiplication of families and the internal understandings, or rather 'misunderstandings,' between relatives. Irish landlords, by their absenteeism or extravagance, are now being forced to realize the dangers which such a system would be sure to result in, in any country. They have not done their duty, and although there are many good, generous and humane landlords to be found, it must be acknowledged they form the exception, not the rule. To illustrate how these small holdings have been increased a newspaper stated the other day that a certain Irish nobleman had a thousand tenant farmers with rents not above ten pounds each. In Kerry an Irish landlord publicly said, 'I receive rents in Kerry from four thousand one hundred and sixty tenants.' How can Ireland expect to prosper when the country is cut up into such a number of small holdings?—and this is only a fragment of one agricultural district. And neither can we conceive of any improvement which a peasant proprietary could make upon the small holdings they at present have. Instead of fighting with the landlords they would then be fighting among themselves. It is fair to place these rentals at an annual valuation of seven pounds each.

"In Donegal the efforts in trying to live, made by these people, are simply awful. Unreclaimed dismal places of bog are called 'farms!' The people live in hovels, and their condition is miserable in the extreme. In Ulster it is but little better in many parts of that county, in which the custom of an outgoing tenant being allowed to sell the goodwill of his farm to a survivor is in force. In Wexford there is what is known as the 'Portsmouth custom,' introduced by the late Lord Portsmouth, whose estates numbered ten thousand acres. By this custom the tenant has a lease for a life, or for thirty-one years. He can at any time, with his landlord's consent, sell the unexpired portion of his lease, and receive from the incoming tenant the value of all he has planted upon it, whether of buildings or of crops. If a tenant desires to renew his lease all the improvements he has effected are treated absolutely as his own. The Portsmouth custom is said to be popular, but, unfortunately, for a just system of tenure, the landlord is relieved from all responsibility. Besides, it prolongs the existence of small holdings.

"The effect of the want of a proper and wise land system in Ireland is the existence of from 290,000 to 300,000 tenants, representing a million individuals who struggle on as best they can with old-fashioned tools, and who are reduced to the verge of starvation by the slightest failure in the crops. In 1841 there were 310,436 farms of from one to five acres, and 252,799 farms of from five to fifteen acres. In 1878 those numbers were reduced to 66,359 and 163,062. On the other hand, the number of farms have increased during the same interval from 79,342 to 137,493, and above thirty acres from 48,625 to 161,263. These latter figures are encouraging, and show that if Ireland were permitted by agitators to work out her own end she would, with the benefits of educational development, have a fair chance of working gradually into a wiser, sounder, and freer system than the one by which she is now fettered."

SYNOD OF MISSISSIPPI.

At the last meeting of the Synod of Mississippi, Nov. 10-13th, there was little beyond the usual routine of business transacted. Rev. Dr. McIlwaine was present and addressed the Synod on Sustentation and Foreign Missions. A motion was made proposing to remit to the Presbyteries the question of a division of Synod, but a substitute declaring this action inexpedient was adopted. The Synod, commending the efforts to revive the theological seminary at Columbia, adopting the following resolution:

That as we learn a vigorous effort is now being made to complete the endowment, so far at least as to support three professors, this Synod will extend a cordial welcome to the Rev. Dr. Girardeau in the prosecution of this agency among our churches, and since few of them can be reached personally by him, Synod recommends that a collection be taken up in all its churches during the month of December, in furtherance of this object.

The next meeting of the Synod will be held in Vicksburg on the third Wednesday in November, 1881.

SYNOD OF GEORGIA.

Met at Thomasville, Ga., on the 10th inst. Rev. Dr. J. L. Rogers was elected moderator and Rev. Messrs. A. W. Clisby and S. E. Axson temporary clerks. The most important matter of general interest was the discussion of the affairs of the Columbia Seminary by Rev. Dr. Mack and Rev. Dr. Girardeau. The first speaker showed that since May, 1879, expenses had been reduced $2,500; receipts had been increased $2,000, and the debt had been reduced $4,100. James Adger & Co. have paid 40 per cent. of $18,000 borrowed by them, are ready to pay as much more when an injunction of court is removed and will eventually pay all. The Seminary can be opened next fall if the Home Memorial Fund of $35,000 is raised. South Carolina, which was asked for $10,000, will without doubt raise $20,000, and contributions from Alabama and elsewhere are confidently relied upon to raise the balance. Dr. Mack asked that the Synod of Georgia would raise $15,000 to complete the Perkins Professorship, which now amounts to $18,000, and cited the raising of $100,000 by the Synod of Kentucky to endow a single college, and the giving of the same amount by one man to Princeton as an encouragement to the effort. Dr. Mack stated in answer to inquiries that many students now at Princeton would return to Columbia Seminary if it should be opened as designed, that a dozen or more new scholars would come in, and that the prospect would be of opening with twenty-five or thirty students. Dr. Girardeau's remarks were directed to answering objections raised to the closing of the Seminary, and to its resuscitation. He claimed that the state of affairs presented the alternative of closing and thus awaking the sympathies of the Church, or of dwindling away hopelessly to utter or irretrievable ruin. As to the mismanagement of funds he asserted that the investments were made in a manner at the time supposed to be entirely judicious, and that the error was one which could not in fact be provided against by human foresight. As to the need of resuscitation: Columbia Seminary is a necessity to the Synods of Georgia, Alabama and South Carolina; there is need of more than one theological seminary that a check may be provided. One seminary may fix the type of thought; it may be the right type, but what if in the course of time it swerve from the old landmarks? In such an event who can estimate the consequences?

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

It is humiliating to contemplate the professional politician as a man utterly without a shred of independence or manliness—always acting from supposed policy. The Governor of Pennsylvania has made a change in his Thanksgiving proclamation to please the Jews. Here is what a secular paper says:

"An important change has been made in the Thanksgiving Proclamation. In the last paragraph the words 'Christian Commonwealth' have been altered to read 'A Commonwealth of Freemen.' This change has been made because of animadversions made by prominent Israelites. Governor Hoyt says he used the word 'Christian' in the sense of 'civilized,' and not particularly in a religious sense."

The following comment is made—not by the secular paper, O, no!—by the Presbyterian:

"When a certain Roman governor, named Pilate, was importuned by some Israelites, with darkened minds and evil hearts, to withdraw his testimony to the Kingship of Jesus he adhered to his convictions of the truth, and repelled them with the stern declaration, 'What I have written I have written.' It would have been a proper rebuke to these latter day petitioners if their arrogant request of the Governor of this Christian Commonwealth had been met in like manner."

The Baptist State Convention at Goldsboro last week adopted an important resolution. It really begins to look as if the liquor associations in getting the last Legislature to reduce the tax on liquor have aroused the Christian people of the State. But here is the action of the Convention—short, sharp and decisive:

"Rev. N. B. Cobb offered the following:

"Resolved, That the Board of Missions petition the Legislature of North Carolina to prohibit the manufacture and sale of spirituous liquors.

"Adopted."

On the night of the 11th inst. the parsonage of Augusta church, near Fort Defiance, Va., was entered and Rev. Alexander Sprunt was robbed. The alarm being given by Mrs. Sprunt, who was first aroused, the thief, a white man, gathered the clothes of Mr. Sprunt and ran off with them. In the garments were a gold watch and pencil, some money and other articles. As such diligent search as could be made at night failed to recover them they were all supposed to be lost. The next morning the clothes were found in a fence corner with the money alone abstracted. Evidently the thief was a professional rogue and so declined the watch, which might criminate him. Several other houses in the neighborhood were entered on the night of the above occurrence, and money was taken from three other parties. In no case was anything but money taken.

The Pittsburg Banner says very sensibly with regard to the rather absurd announcement of the American Bible Revision Committee:

Fears seem to be entertained that American publishers will seize upon the revised English New Testament about to be issued by the University Presses of Oxford and Cambridge, and bring out rival and cheaper editions. The American Bible Revision Committee has issued a circular stating that "only those editions of the New Revision, including the marginal renderings, which are published or approved by the University Presses of England, will be recognized by us as the authorized editions." It is difficult to see how in the absence of an international copyright re-publication in this country can be prevented, or what difference it makes whether the committee approves it or not, provided it is a correct re-production. At the same time neither the committee nor any one else must suppose that the King James edition of the New Testament is about to be thrown aside at once, and that every body will rush to buy the revised edition, however, excellent it may be. Its introduction to general use—if this is ever accomplished—will be gradual, as has been the case with all previous revisions.

We feel that we ought to call special attention to the following action of the Synod of North Carolina at its last session:

WHEREAS, The Orphan Asylum of North Carolina is a purely benevolent institution, and is doing great good for the needy orphans of our State; therefore,

Resolved, That we approve of its purposes, and suggest that the congregations within our bounds take up, at their own convenience, an annual collection in behalf of that institution, and forward the sums collected, in connection with any article of food and raiment which may be contributed, to the superintendent, Mr. J. H. Mills.

We beg that those who owe us for the PRESBYTERIAN during the current year or longer will make a special effort to pay us now.

A minister making a remittance says: "Almost invariably when a member of the Church stops his church paper, his religion is dwarfed. His retrenchment is where he can least afford it. His pew becomes an unfaithful one."

Here is a clipping from the Presbyterian, which puts it about right:

He mixed his figures somewhat, but the Methodist preacher who went largely into politics, and suffered in his religious character was about right when he said to his conference: "Brethren! The muddy pool of politics was the rock on which I split!"

The Central Presbyterian gets off the following bit of fun:

The Central Baptist of St. Louis asked a High Church Episcopal paper out West, "What is the difference between High-Churchism and Romanism?" The paper appealed to was very angry at the question, and told the Central Baptist that "the answer to that question could be found by any intelligent man, if he had a grain of sincerity in his composition, by reading the works of the great English divines for the last three hundred years."

The Central Baptist refuses to do it!

The Christian Union does not favor the introduction of the Ober-Ammergau Passion Play, or any imitation of it into New York:

New York City is informed that it is to have the pleasure of witnessing a Passion Play prepared by a Jew with special reference to making a drama that shall not arouse prejudice against the Jews. "No connection with Ober-Ammergau" is publicly announced; that was Christian; this is wholly undenominational. When the same play was offered to a San Francisco audience the press and pulpit combined in a crusade against the monstrosity. A committee of the Board of Supervisors requested its withdrawal; and that favor being flatly refused by the management, it passed an ordinance making any dramatic representation of the life and death of Jesus Christ a penal offence, enforced the ordinance by fining the manager fifty dollars for going on with the play in spite of the prohibition, and a year later, after elaborate argument, refused to rescind the ordinance. This play driven out of San Francisco under the mayoralty of Mr. Kalloch, it is proposed to transfer to the New York boards. Whether a New York audience will give to such a travesty on both art and religion a more encouraging reception than the Pacific Coast gave to it remains to be seen.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

COLUMBIA SEMINARY.

The Synod of South Carolina, which met last week in this place, decided to endeavor to raise $20,000 within its bounds as part of the proposed $30,000 endowment of the Home Memorial Fund for the Columbia Theological Seminary. There is every prospect that South Carolina will raise the $20,000; the contributions to that end are already pouring in. It is expected that Alabama and the rest of the Church will raise the full endowment of Dr. Woodrow's chair. Thus $45,000 will be raised, and the Seminary will be re-opened next fall.

Davidson College was represented before the Synod by its President. None who heard Dr. Hepburn's address can well doubt that Davidson is preeminently worthy, or that its President is able effectively to present the claims of this growing institution of higher education. F. P. R.

DEATH OF REV. DR. T. H. NEWTON.

It is announced by telegraph that Rev. Dr. Thomas H. Newton, of East Hanover Presbytery, died on Friday last, the 19th inst., at Waverly, in Sussex county, Va. Dr. N. has for years been incapable of active service by reason of the infirmities of age. We will be glad to have some friend of the deceased furnish a sketch of his life and labors.

FROM TEXAS.

Rev. D. A. McRae has returned from Texas, and is now at his home. He may be addressed at Melrose, Robeson county, N. C. At his last service held in Texas, on the fourth Sabbath in October, two members were received into the church at San Augustine, and seven children were baptized. One member was received into the same church on the third Sabbath.

Mr. James Hill was lately ordained deacon in Richlands church, in Wilmington Presbytery. We have no further information.

In our obituary columns will be found announcement of the death of Mrs. June C. Williamson, wife of Rev. Dr. L. Williamson, of Washington, Ark. Dr. Williamson is now in his 85th year. There is a peculiar feeling of sympathy evoked when those who have walked together through a long life's course are called to part. Dr. W. was for many years President of Davidson College, and this affliction will call up sincere condolence from many of our readers.

Under date of Nov. 19th, we are informed by Mr. J. H. Mills, Superintendent of the Oxford Orphan Asylum that Iona Presbyterian church, in Fayetteville Presbytery, has donated $8 43 to the Asylum.

A private letter from Dr. Latimer informs us that he, with his family, expects to take passage on the City of Chester, from Liverpool, Dec. 9th. Without special delays on passage, Prof. Latimer will thus be at his post to resume his duties in Davidson College on or about Christmas, and will resume his pastoral labors with Ramah and Huntersville churches at the same time.

EBENEZER CHURCH, ORANGE PRESBYTERY.

We copy the following relative to the dedication of Ebenezer (colored) church from the Africo-American Presbyterian:

The members of Ebenezer Presbyterian church, at Newbern, N. C., under the care of Rev. A. A. Scott, stated supply, have been laboring for the last seven months in the erection of a new house of worship. After many faithful prayers and much sacrifice on the part of their minister, with the congregation and Rev. L. C. Vass, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, they have dedicated a fine church, which is an honor not only to the city of Newbern and Orange Presbytery, but also to the State of North Carolina.

The building is 30 by 45 feet, with a vestibule 6 by 12 feet; regular Gothic style, with beautifully stained glass windows, which were given as memorial windows.

The 1st Sabbath of November (7th), at 11 a. m., was fixed as the time for dedication. The day was a delightful one, and long before the above hour the house was filled. The Rev. W. R. Coles, Synodical Missionary of the Synod of Atlantic, had been invited to preach the dedicatory sermon. He had for his subject "This holy place," and his matter evidenced great research and careful selection of that which was most striking, and his manner of delivery was very forcible and elegant, and cannot fail to have a lasting impression on all those who heard.

After the sermon and singing followed a brief sketch of the work, by Rev. A. A. Scott, from which it appeared that the pastor (Rev. L. C. Vass) and members of the First Presbyterian church, and the good white citizens of Newbern, had contributed to the enterprise about $400. A collection was then taken up amounting to about $17.

FROM VIRGINIA.

We learn indirectly that Augusta church at Fort Defiance, Va., of which Rev. Alexander Sprunt is pastor, has been blessed with an special manifestation of the Holy Spirit. Preaching services were held for several days previous to the Sabbath of communion, Nov. 14th, and on that occasion there were nine additions. Among these additions were one person over three score years of age and another over three score and ten; a father, mother and only daughter were also among those received.

ABSTRACT

Of the Proceedings of the Synod of North Carolina at its 67th Annual Meeting, Held in the First Presbyterian Church, Raleigh, N. C., November 10-13, 1880.

The Synod of North Carolina met according to adjournment in the First Presbyterian Church, Raleigh, N. C., Wednesday Nov. 10, 1880, at 7 p. m., and adjourned Saturday Nov. 13, 1880, at 9.30 p. m.

The opening sermon was preached by the Moderator, the Rev. E. F. Rockwell, from Rom. i: 16.

There were present during the sessions of Synod, one hundred and twenty-eight; of whom sixty-four were ministers and sixty-four were elders. They were from Presbyteries as follows: Orange, 22 ministers and 20 ruling elders; Concord 11 ministers and 13 ruling elders; Fayetteville 12 ministers and 16 ruling elders; Wilmington 8 ministers and 11 ruling elders; Mecklenburg 11 ministers and 4 ruling elders.

The Rev. J. Henry Smith, D. D., of the Presbytery of Orange, was chosen moderator, and the Rev. J. A. Ramsay of the Presbytery of Concord, and the Rev. S. H. Chester of the Presbytery of Mecklenburg were chosen temporary clerks.

The following were invited to sit as corresponding members and were introduced to the Synod by the moderator: Rev. J. Leighton Wilson, D. D., of the Synod of South Carolina; Rev. Alex. Martin, D. D., and Rev. M. D. Hoge, D. D., of the Synod of Virginia; Rev. Geo. Summey of the Synod of Kentucky; and Rev. Richard S. Burwell of the Synod of Texas.

The agent of Sabbath Schools Rev. L. C. Vass, made report which was received and approved. (This report will appear in the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN.)

The agent of Sustentation Rev. H. G. Hill, made report which was received and approved. (This report will appear in the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN.)

The following resolutions appended thereto, were adopted:

1. That Synod recommend that our Presbyteries employ more vigorous efforts to so raise the standard of ministerial support that our laboring ministers shall not be compelled to engage in secular pursuits for a maintenance.

2. Synod would urge upon the Presbyteries the adoption of such measures as are calculated to foster and develop our pastoral charges and feeble churches.

The Treasurer's report was laid before the Synod, with his books and vouchers for examination. The committee to whom they were referred reported as follows:

Your committee appointed to examine the Treasurer's report, books and vouchers beg leave to report that they have performed that duty, and find the Treasurer's report correct and and his books neatly kept.

We find that he has received from all of the Presbyteries $259.56; that he has paid out $243; leaving a balance in his hands of $16.56.

Your committee also find that the Synod owes $252 25; and that there is due the Synod from the Presbyteries as assessments, the sum of $352.94; one Presbytery owing $232.50 of this amount.

Respectfully submitted.

CHAS. G. YATES, ALEX. SPRUNT, } Com.

Synod suspended the standing rule requiring the Missionary meeting to be held Friday night, and Friday at 11 a. m., the agent of Foreign Missions, Rev. R. Z. Johnston made report which was received and approved. (This report will appear in the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN.)

The Synod then heard Rev. J. Leighton Wilson, D. D., the General Assembly's Secretary of Home and Foreign Missions, and other addresses, and engaged in special devotional exercises. A collection was taken up for this cause, amounting to $104.65.

The following recommendation appended to the report on Foreign Missions was adopted:

That the Presbyteries be advised to consider the work of Foreign Missions at their spring meetings, and instruct their presbyterial agents to address all the churches, either personally, or by circular or letter, or through the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN, and urge all to forward something for the cause of Foreign Missions during the months of May and June, of every year.

The agent of Publication Rev. F. H. Johnson made report, which was received and approved. (This report will appear in the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN.)

The resolutions appended thereto, adopted at the last meeting of Synod, were re-affirmed and are as follows:

Resolved, That all our Presbyteries be urged to enter upon the work of Colportage, and to prosecute it with vigour to the fullest extent of their means and opportunities.

2. That in the selection of Sabbath School literature, the preference should be given to the publications of our own committee by our ministers and churches, and officers of Sabbath Schools and heads of families.

Overture No. 1, from the Presbytery of Fayetteville was laid before the Synod, and referred to the committee on Bills and Overture. The Overture is as follows:

The Presbytery of Fayettoville respectfully overtures the Synod of North Carolina to answer these questions:

In the case of definite suspension by a church session of a member of the church when the time expires for which the member is suspended, does he resume his place as a member of the church, without any specific action of the session in the premises?

In the event there is no evidence satisfactory to the session, of repentance for the offence for which the definite suspension is inflicted, is further action called for on the part of the session?

The committee recommended the following answer, which was adopted:

Answer 1. Definite suspension concludes itself and expires by limitation. The member so suspended does resume his place without further action of session.

2. In case there is no evidence of repentance the ends of discipline are not reached. The session is therefore bound to take up the case again and issue it. Suspension ought not to be made definite unless evidence of repentance is given before the sentence is reached.

Overture No. 2, from the Presbytery of Fayetteville, was laid before Synod and referred to the Committee on Bills and Overtures. The overture is as follows:

The Presbytery of Fayetteville respectfully overtures the Synod of North Carolina to answer the question—

Is it proper for a ruling elder, in closing a prayer meeting, to pronounce the Apostolic Benediction?

The following answer was adopted by the Synod as a substitute for the answer recommended by the committee:

Answer. The Apostolic Benediction, being not of the form of a prayer but a solemn blessing of the people of God, in the name and by the authority of the Head of the Church, is to be regarded as a purely ministerial act.

The Agent of Education, Rev. L. McKinnon, made report, which was received and approved. (This report will appear in the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN.)

In connection with the consideration of this report Synod heard Rev. A. D. Hepburn, D. D., with reference to the claims of Davidson College.

The following resolution appended to the report was adopted:

Resolved, That the last Thursday in February, 1881, be observed as a day of prayer for the blessing of God upon our institutions of learning.

A resolution was introduced touching the excuses rendered in open Synod for absence and tardiness, which, after some discussion, was referred to a special committee. The committee recommended the following action, which was adopted:

Resolved, That all excuses for absence and for tardiness be referred to the Committee on Leave of Absence.

The responses to official notification from those absent at previous meetings of Synod, and letters assigning excuses from present meeting of Synod, being referred to a special committee, the following report was made, which was received and adopted:

The committee appointed to examine letters of excuse directed to this Synod would report that they have attended to the duty put into their hands.

They report that these letters may be classified:

1. There are those who have not been able to attend on account of age and infirmities. Your committee would recommend that the Rev. G. W. Ferrill and Rev. Drury Lacy, D. D., of Orange Presbytery, the Rev. R. H. Morrison, D. D., and Rev. W. N. Morrison of Mecklenburg Presbytery, the Rev. Thomas N. Paxton of Concord Presbytery, in consequence of age and increasing infirmities, be excused from attendance upon the future meetings of Synod except as it may be agreeable to them.

2. There are those who do not attend for the want of means. Your committee suggest the following action: The Synod would recommend to the Presbyteries to take some action to secure, according to our constitution, the means to defray the expenses of ministers and delegates to Synod from the churches which they represent.

3. There are some who confess their faults without rendering any excuse but ask the further indulgence of Synod. While this Synod are willing to grant indulgence for the past they would enjoin upon ministers and sessions more fidelity for the future.

4. There are those from whom no answer has been received whatever. Your committee recommend that the Stated Clerk be directed to write to such, informing them that if they fail to respond, giving excuse for such absence, they will render themselves liable to the censure of Synod.

The Agent of Evangelistic Labor, Rev. C. M. Payne, made report, which was received and approved. (This report will appear in the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN.)

In connection with this report, the agent, Rev. C. M. Payne made a report concerning Evangelistic Labor among the Colored People which was received and approved. (This report will appear in the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN.)

The Committee appointed to prepare an Address to the Churches, submitted a report which was received and adopted, and ordered to be read to the churches. It was further ordered that a copy be furnished the editor of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN with a request for publication. (This address will appear hereafter.)

The Committee on Statistical Reports submitted the following report which was received and adopted:

The Committed on the Statistical Reports of Presbyteries respectfully report the following summary of the changes which have occurred in the Synod during the past year:

1. Two ministers have died, one in each of the Presbyteries of Orange and Concord.

2. Four ministers have been received, two into the Presbytery of Orange and two into that of Wilmington.

3. Two ministers have been dismissed, both from the Presbytery of Orange.

4. There have been four licensures, two in the Presbytery of Fayetteville, and one each in the Presbyteries of Concord and Mecklenburg.

5. The pastoral relation has been dissolved nine times; once each in the Presbyteries of Concord and Fayetteville, twice in the Presbytery of Wilmington and five times in the Presbytery of Orange. It has been constituted thirteen times; once each in the Presbyteries of Concord and Wilmington, three times in the Presbytery of Fayetteville and eight times in the Presbytery of Concord.

6. Three new churches have been organized and enrolled; one in the Presbytery of Concord, and two (one of which is for colored people) in the Presbytery of Orange. One church in Concord Presbytery has been dissolved.

The Committee on Union Theological Seminary made their report, which was received and adopted. The report is as follows:

The committee on which were referred the documents relating to Union Theological Seminary recommend the following action:

1. The Synod acknowledges "with profound gratitude the manifest favor of God to this Seminary in years that are past, and His gracious and guiding hand during the perplexities that have environed this Institution; and to Him we look for continued direction and blessing."

2. It is gratifying that the treasurer has been able to meet the demands upon him [illegible] professors' salaries and other expenses. We are farther gratified to learn, from private sources, that the Seminary has recently become entitled to a legacy of about $20,000 from a faithful friend, an elder of the Church in Virginia.

3. The Synod is gratified by the change in session adopted at the last meeting of the board of Trustees.

4. The Synod reappoints the Rev. J. Henry Smith, D. D., the Rev. H. G. Hill, and Dr. E. Nye Hutchinson as the Directors for the next four years.

The following were appointed to draft suitable minutes, expressive of the feelings of Synod on the death of ministers:

On the death of Rev. Edward Hines, Rev. D. E. Jordan and Ruling Elder T. A. Watkins.

On the death of Rev. Daniel Lindley, D. D., Rev. J. Rumple and Ruling Elder J. C. Barnhardt.

When the order of the day taken by Synod for its memorial service arrived, the following minute was read, and after remarks by different members of the Synod, was unanimously adopted by the rising vote of Synod.

REV. DANIEL LINDLEY, D. D.

Since the last meeting of this Synod God has been pleased to call from the labors of earth to the rest of Heaven, the Rev. Daniel Lindley, D. D., one of the oldest members of this body.

About fifty years ago Mr. Lindley went as a missionary to Port Natal, South Africa, where he labored for forty years, and was permitted to see a mighty work of grace and social regeneration take place among the inhabitants of that dark continent. In consequence of his prolonged absence in foreign lands he was not personally known to many of the members of Synod, but the annual calling of his name kept his memory fresh in the minds of the Synod. As he was a representative of our Church in the foreign field, we rejoice in the success that crowned his labors in the service of the Master. And now that it has pleased Him who walketh in the midst of the seven golden candle-sticks to remove our light from the Church on the earth to shine in the Heavenly City, we bow with submission to the Divine will.

We furthermore extend our sympathy and condolence to the surviving members of Father Lindley's family, and commend them to God and to the Word of His grace.

At the conclusion of the reading of the minute, and its adoption, the Synod engaged in prayer to Almighty God, their devotions being led by the Rev. R. H. Chapman, D. D.

The resolutions appointing a standing Committee on the State of the Church brought before the last meeting of Synod and docketed for consideration at this meeting of Synod were on motion, laid on the table.

Salisbury, N. C., was chosen as the place and Wednesday, Nov. 2nd, 1881, at 7 p. m. was chosen as the time of the next meeting of Synod.

The following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That the whole order of business of Synod be referred to a special committee to make report at next stated meeting, in order to shorten the routine and simplify the business engaging the attention of the Synod.

The Moderator appointed as the committee under this resolution, Rev. W. S. Lacy, Rev. L. C. Vass, and Rev. L. McKinnon.

The following resolution was adopted:

WHEREAS, The Oxford Orphan Asylum of North Carolina is a purely benevolent institution and is doing great good for the needy orphans of our State, therefore

Resolved That we approve of its purposes and suggest that the congregations within our bounds take up at their own convenience, an annual collection in behalf of that institution, and forward the sums collected in connection with articles of food and raiment which may be contributed, to the Superintendent, Mr. J. H. Mills.

The committee appointed to prepare a minute touching the death of Rev. Edward Hines was continued till the next meeting.

The Stated Clerk presented the following statistical report of the Synod of North Carolina to the General Assembly which was received and adopted, and a copy ordered to be forwarded to the General Assembly:

The Synod of North Carolina respectfully reports to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, that it consists of five Presbyterics, and that these Presbyteries consist in whole of 115 ministers and 227 churches, having under their care 8 licentiates and 16 candidates, viz.:

COLLECTION FOR THE COLORED INSTITUTE

The ministers and sessions are reminded that the first Sabbath of December is the day appointed by the General Assembly for collections for the support for the Institute for Training Colored Ministers. This Institute is growing slowly, but steadily in numbers and in usefulness. There are now thirteen students in regular attendance with the near prospect of five or six more connected with our Church.

We have very much to encourage us in our work in the diligence and good deportment of the students and their progress in study. We feel no hesitation in asking for the liberal support of our churches.

Collections should be sent to Dr. J. T. Searcy, treasurer, Tuskaloosa, Ala.

We have received from the American Tract Society, 150 Nassau street, New York, the following:

1. From Hong Kong to the Himalayas, or Three Thousand Miles Through India. By Prof. E. Warren Clark. 16mo., 368 pages; 32 cuts. $1 50. 1880. This is a most attractive and instructive book of travel through Southern China and Hindostan. Its full page illustrations from original photographs brings many wonders very near. What a delight this rich volume would have given us when a Sabbath school scholar. It is just the book to foster a love for missions, while it increases useful knowledge.

2. Talks and Stories about Prayer. The Lord's Prayer, and "Now I lay me down to sleep." By Rev. W. F. Crafts. Illustrated. 1880. 60 cents. No one familiar with Mr. Craft's popular style needs to be told that this is a delightful little book. The talks are brief, pointed and profitable.

3. Marie Manning, and Others. By Bittersweet. 1880. 50 cents. Ten nice little stories.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

PRESBYTERIAN (SOUTH).

Items from the Southern Presbyterian:

A correspondent in Augusta writes us: "On the first Sabbath in November the Second Presbyterian Church in Augusta, Ga., added to its membership four persons, making five since the last communion. This church was organized in May, 1879, with a membership of eighteen. Rev. G. T. Goetchius was installed pastor the July following. During the eighteen months since its organization the membership has increased to seventy-four. One very singular feature connected with its history is that there has not been a death in any of the families of the church. It has a flourishing Sabbath school which is doing good work. The Ladies Aid Society is a most active and efficient organization. The future of the church is highly encouraging."

Since last February twelve communicants have been added to the membership of Fair Hope church in Darlington county, S. C., ten on profession of their faith, and two by certificate."

Items from the Christian Observer:

Rev. A. D. McClure was installed pastor of the Presbyterian church, Bardstown, Ky., on Sunday morning of last week. The Nelson Record says: "Rev. A. McDonald preached a strong sermon on 'Brotherly Love,' after which Rev. Ben. Helm delivered the charge to the pastor in an earnest manner, and Rev. Dr. Guerrant, of Louisville, delivered the charge to the people." There were three additions to the church—two by letter and one on profession of faith.

Mr Joseph B. Wilson, a venerable member of the Presbyterian Church, at Collierstown, Rockbridge county, Va., who died on November 1st, bequeathed his entire estate remaining at his death to Union Theological Seminary, Prince Edward county, Va. One estimate states that the bequest will amount to thirty thousand dollars. This is probably too large, but the handsome gift will probaby exceed half or two-thirds of that sum. Mr. Wilson has long been a warm friend and liberal benefactor of the Seminary. Several years ago he gave it twelve thousand and five hundred dollars, and last October five thousand and five hundred more—in all, eighteen thousand dollars—and now, at his death, his whole remaining estate.

The Presbyterian Church in Eufaula, Ala., has given a call to the Rev. T. M. Boyd, of Mount Meridian, in the Valley of Virginia, to become its pastor.

On the fifth Sabbath of October Rev. G. F. Robertson was installed pastor of Washington and Columbus churches in Arkansas. His people gave him a hearty reception, and are now arranging for his temporal comfort by furnishing his house. It is believed and hoped that these churches will prosper under his ministry.

Rev. E. E. Ervin takes charge of the Presbyterian church at Washington, Ky. Correspondents are requested to address him at that point.

Rev J. R Bridges, who was lately supplying the church at Eminence, has changed his field of labor. His correspondents will please note the change of his address from Eminence to Prince Grove, Clark county, Ky.

Rev. E. Brantly is now preaching to the Hall, Cripple Creek and Woodbury churches in Nashville Presbytery, and his postoffice address is accordingly changed from McMinnville to Walter Hill, Rutherford county, Tenn.

Rev. John R. King has removed to Leesburg, Washington county, Tenn. His address is, therefore, changed from Bristol Tenn. to Leesburg, Washington county, Tenn.

Items from the Central Presbyterian:

At an adjourned meeting of Abingdon Presbytery held at Marion, Va., November 11th and 12th, Mr. D. E. Frierson was examined, ordained, and installed as pastor of the church at that place. Rev. W. V. Wilson preached the ordination sermon Friday night; Rev. J. H. Alexander presided, proposed the constitutional question and made the prayer; Rev. J. C. Carson charged the pastor and Rev. E. H. Barnett charged the people.

Rev. H. S. Yerger, pastor of McNeilly church, Nashville, Tenn., has just closed a meeting in which eleven were added to his church. Rev. J. W. Hoyte did the preaching for the last six days.

The Presbytery of Montgomery, in session Nov. 10th at Floyd C. H. Va., enrolled New Castle church in Craig county. The General Assembly was asked to reaffirm its paper of 1877 on dancing.

Rev. A. H. Price assisted by Rev. Dr. Strickler organized Linville Creek church in Rockingham county, Va., on 10th October last, with nineteen members. A meeting of three days was held and God's people were revived. There were six additions and others are looked for. Messrs. R. I. Mason and F. C. Hopkins were elected elders.

PRESBYTERIAN (NORTH).

Rev. Coles R. Wilkins, pastor at the time of his decease of the church at Howells, N. Y., and for many years pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Lansing, Mich., died in New York city on the 6th inst., aged 69 years.

Dr. A. A. Hodge has been elected trustee of Princeton College in place of Rev. Dr. Adams, deceased. Mr. R. L. Stuart donated $100,000 to the invested funds of the college, on the following condition: "If at any time the instructions in the college should differ from the principles of Christianity, or from the leading doctrines of the Presbyterian Church of the United States, the sum given shall be transferred to the Board of Missions of the Presbyterian Church."

Dr. W. A. P. Martin, president of the Imperial College at Peking, China, has lately sailed for Europe, where he will remain some time. He has been commissioned by the Chinese government to report on the educational systems of the United States and Europe. Dr. Martin is a minister of the Presbyterian Church, and was a missionary in China for many years.—Presbyterian.

BAPTIST.

The North Carolina Baptist State Convention met in Goldsboro. The session is semi-centennial. Rev. N. B Cobb was re-elected president of the Convention and Messrs. Wm. Biggs and N. B. Broughton secretaries. The reports are gratifying. The following contributions are reported for the year: Foreign missions $4,696 40, State missions $54,155 15, Sunday schools $8,000, education $1,771 83, domestic missions about $1,000.

Brooklyn District, N. Y., has elected Rev. J. Hyatt Smith to Congress.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

Drs. W. W. Barr and R. Stewart have gone, under direction of the Board of Foreign Missions to inspect the work in Egypt and India.

REFORMED EPISCOPAL.

Rev. Samuel Cutler devised $1,000 to the Reformed Episcopal church of Boston, of which he was pastor, $1,000 to Faith Training College, and $500 to the General Theological Library.

METHODIST.

Methodism has so increased in Long Island since 1784 that in the city of Brooklyn the increase has proportionately exceeded the population. There are now in Brooklyn 37 Methodist churches with 11,491 members and $1,350,500 of church property. On this property there is a debt of $363,000.

The debt on the Methodist churches of Salt Lake City has been reduced from $42,500 to $2,800.

Bad Breath arises from the stomach, and can be easily corrected if you take Simmons Liver Regulator. It is peculiarly adapted to the stomach, correcting acidity, destroying foul gases, and allaying inflammation. Take after eating a half-teaspoonful, it assimilates with the food and assures perfect digestion, without which that repulsive disorder, Bad Breath, must ensue. The Delaware Democrat says: "For the cure of Dyspepsia, Bilious Complaint and Headache, Simmons Liver Regulator has no equal. It rarely fails to affect a cure, and never in giving relief. There is no ingredient in its manufacture that can injure any one. It has been tried for many years, and unlike many other medicines, is steadily gaining the confidence of the public.

"THE SPIRITUAL SONGS SERIES."

200,000 in less than two years.

Of Rev. Dr. Robinson's latest hymn and tune book for church use. "Spiritual Songs for Church and Choir," Rev. J. E. Twitchell, of Cleveland, O, says: "A committee of my church, after a careful examination of nearly all modern hymn-books, finally recommended for adoption Dr. Charles S. Robinson's Spiritual Songs. We are fully satisfied that we have made selections of the best book extant." This work, the first of the Spiritual Songs, was issued in January, 1879; the popular prayer-meeting edition. "Spiritual Songs for Social Worship" (of which the N. Y. Evening Post says: "Its convenience and desirability can scarcely be too highly praised"), followed in the spring of the same year, and in July last, the third book of the series, "Spiritual Songs for the Sunday School," was published. Of these three more than two hundred thousand copies have already been printed. They probably constitute the most popular series of hymn and tune books ever issued in America. The price of "Spiritual Songs for Church and Choir" is $1 20 to churches in quantities; the edition for prayer-meetings is sold at 60 cents in quantities. Returnable sample copies sent free for examination.

Of "Spiritual Songs for the Sunday School," the National S. S. Teacher says: "The book is just such a one as we would like to see in the Sunday school." The Interior (Chicago) says of it: "We know of no other book so excellent for the service of song, nor so admirably fitted for cultivating a love for really good hymns and good music." Sample copies sent for 25 cents; price to schools, 40 cents. It is highly commended by Rev. Dr. J. H. Vincent and by the leading newspapers in all denominations.

SECULAR MISCELLANY.

If an untruth is only a day old it is called a lie; if it is a year old it is called a falsehood, but if it is a century old it is called a legend.

The original Seckel pear tree is still standing near Girard Point, Philadelphia, on land once owned by Lawrence Seckel. It is supposed to be about two hundred years old, and what is left of it measures: Height 26 feet, half-trunk—a mere shell—5 feet 4½ inches in circumference.

Although he had amassed a large fortune, he died in comparative poverty, having been pensioned by the State. Consumption Cured.

At her residence, St. Paul's, Robeson county, on the 25th of September, 1880, of ulceration of the stomach, Mrs. FLORA LITTLE, wife of James Little, Esq., aged 48 years.

Her illness, which was long and frequently painful, she bore with Christian fortitude seldom equalled. Though anxious to be spared to her husband and children (to whose welfare and happiness, she seemed so essential), yet she rested in the truth, and at times rejoiced in it that God reigns and would deal with her and as He saw best. In early life she accepted Jesus as her Saviour, and connected herself with St. Paul's church, of which she continued an earnest and consistent member until called up higher. In all the relations of life—as daughter, sister, wife mother and friend—she secured the respect and affection of all.

Pastor.

At her residence near Washington, Ark., Nov. 2d, Mrs. JANE C. WILLIAMSON, wife of Rev. L. Williamson, D. D., in the 76th year of her age.

She has long been a sufferer, and her last month was spent in intense pain; but never did she quit the hopes she held so long. For nearly sixty years she "adorned the doctrine of God." Now she has "come to the General Assembly and Church of the First-Born which are written in heaven."

... the fact that already, about 70,000 Cabinet or Parlor Organs are yearly sold in the United States (nearly twice as many as of piano-fortes) attests their growing popularity.

THE FINER DRAWING ROOM STYLES.

MASON & HAMLIN CABINET ORGANS.

Comparatively few musicians, even, have kept pace with recent improvements in reed instruments and are fully aware of the excellence now attained in the finer styles, in the manufacture of which the Mason & Hamlin Organ Co. are quite unrivaled. These styles must not be judged by the small organ so largely sold, which they greatly excel. It is principally these finer styles which have won for the Mason & Hamlin Organs the extraordinary distinctions awarded them at EVERY GREAT WORLD'S INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION AND COMPARISON OF THE BEST PRODUCTIONS OF ALL NATIONS FOR THIRTEEN YEARS; being the only highest awards to any American organs at any one. It is one of these which led Dr. Franz Liszt to characterize the Mason & Hamlin Organs not only as "matchless," but as "unrivaled," and which led the distinguished Otto Xaawenka, of Berlin, to declare them "the most excellent of instruments," adding: "They are capable of giving the finest tone coloring, and no other instrument so enraptures the player." Theodore Thomas testifies that musicians generally rank these organs very high, far above all others, in which opinion he himself fully concurs. Ole Bull found them so superior as to draw from him the declaration that "Their fine quality of tone is in contrast with that of other reed organs." The distinguished tenor, Italo Campanini, in a note to the manufacturers, as he was about leaving this country recently, wrote: "Having had opportunity to observe and use your organs, while singing in your country, I take pleasure in testifying to their admirable qualities. They excel all similar instruments of which I have any knowledge. But you have better proof of my opinion of them than even this expression, in the fact that I have just purchased one to take with me to Italy." Hundreds of similar opinions from distinguished musicians have accumulated in the hands of the manufacturers.

A recent beautiful invention which the Mason & Hamlin Co. are now introducing, greatly improves the key action of such instruments, lightening the touch, heretofore difficult when many stops were used, one-half, and still more improving it in other respects.

THE FINER DRAWING ROOM STYLES of the Mason & Hamlin Organs are furnished in cases of Black Walnut, Mahogany, Ash and Ebonized, plain to very elegant, some with pipe organ tops. They have from thirteen to twenty-three stops; some with two manuals and full pedal base. Net prices are from $200 to $900.

The Mason & Hamlin Co. also manufacture a variety of styles of fine organs for churches where greatest power as well as variety is required; they also regularly make a large variety of small organs from $51 up; all of which are of very highest excellence. Organs are furnished for monthly or quarterly payments, $5 and upwards.

Illustrated Catalogue, 32 pp., 4to, with prices and circulars containing much useful information, sent free.

We especially invite all persons taking any interest in such matters to visit our warerooms and examine these organs. It is always a pleasure to exhibit them.

Dr. S. W. BEALL,

Homeopathic Catarrhal Specialist,

A reputable Physician of 30 years' practice.

Not a Douche, Not an Inhaler, Not a Snuff.

Patients at a distance treated by the aid of a carefully prepared diagnostic sheet. No single box or bottle of medicine is applicable to all cases.

Dr. Beall has cured hundreds of cases in its worst form, and patients now being treated in all parts of the United States report rapid improvement. Treatment is pleasant and directions easily followed.

The following is a specimen of the testimonials constantly being received:

To the Public—Statement of A. W. Essey, of the firm of Essey & Harter, Troy, Ohio.

For a number of years I was afflicted with Nasal Catarrh, affecting seriously, both my head and throat. The discharges from the nose were streaked with blood, and had a very offensive smell. After a course of treatment from Dr. Beall, I am entirely cured.

FOR THE FAMILY.

The Right Must Win.

Oh, it is hard to work for God,
To rise and take his part
Upon this battlefield of earth,
And not sometimes lose heart.

He hides himself so wondrously,
As though there were no God;
He is least seen when all the powers
Of ill are most abroad.

Or He deserts us at the hour
The fight is all but lost;
And seems to leave us to ourselves
Just when we need Him most.

Ill masters good, good seems to change
To ill with greatest ease;
And, worse than all, the good with good
Is at cross purposes.

Ah! God is other than we think;
His ways are far above,
Far beyond reason's height, and reached,
Only by childlike love.

Workmen of God, oh lose not heart,
But learn what God is like;
And in the darkest battlefield
Thou shalt know where to strike.

Thrice blest is he to whom is given
The instinct that can tell
That God is on the field when He Is most invisible.

Blest, too, is he who can divine
Where real right doth lie,
And dares to take the side that seems
Wrong to man's blindfold eye.

For right is right, since God is God;
And right the day must win;
To doubt would be disloyalty,
To falter would be sin! —F. W. Faber.

The Cat, The Mouse, and The Little Red-Hen.

BY MRS. BATTERSBY.

Once upon a time, in a small house, in a valley, dwelt a cat, a mouse, and a little red hen. They were very happy, their only foes being an old mother fox and her son, who lived in a house upon the hill-side, and who often watched their neighbors, hoping to find them asleep or quarreling some day, and to have a feast upon them; but they never quarreled, and one always kept watch; so if ever a bushy tail belonging to Mr. or Mrs. Reynard appeared over the brow of the hill, the cat mewed, the mouse squeaked, and the hen crowed, a warning note, and then ran into their dwelling and locked the door.

But the cat and the mouse were a very lazy pair, and whatever had to be done in the house fell to the share of the little hen, which was rather unfair. When they got up in the morning it was "Who'll make the beds?" "I won't," said the cat, and "I won't," said the mouse. "Well, I'll make them myself," said the little red hen. Then when they were hungry, "Who'll bake the bread?" "I won't," said the cat, and "I won't," said the mouse. "Well, I'll bake it myself," said the little red hen. And if the house wanted cleaning. "Who'll sweep the rooms?" "I won't," said the cat, and "I won't," said the mouse. "I'll sweep them myself," said the little red hen. And so all day long the cat sat before the fire, licking her paws now and then, and the mouse curled his whiskers and combed his hair like any other gentleman, while the little red hen bustled about, with her duster in her claws, singing an old sort of song which sounded like—

Cluck, cluck, cluck,
I'm glad I'm not a duck
Weet, weet, weet,
For then I'd have web feet;
Cluck, cluck, cluck,
And water on my back;
Trill, trill, trill,
And such a vulgar bill,
And now I've eight free toes,
And lovely Roman nose,
Cinck, cluck, cluck,
I'm glad I'm not a duck;

and doing her work and that of both her companions also. To do them justice, they were very fond of her; but they looked upon her as a good, simple sort of a creature, whom nature had intended for their slave, and who had every reason to be happy.

One morning old Mother Fox got out on the wrong side of the bed, and of course you know my young readers, this did not put her into a good temper; so she scolded her son all breakfast-time, as they had only the bones of a goose between them, and her teeth were not strong, as they had been when she was young. At last, when one of them broke off short, as she was craunching a merry thought, Madame Fox got up in a rage, and flinging an old sack at her dutiful son's head, she told him "to be off at once, and if he did not bring home something good for dinner he knew what he might expect;" at which threat young Fox groaned inwardly, for his mamma kept a post-stick in the corner of her cottage, and his bones felt a little sore from the last chastisement he had received. So he threw the sack over his back and trotted off in the direction of the house in the valley, though as he did not hear a mew, a squeak, or a crow, he feared the "happy family" were within and had their door locked.

Now the good little red hen was just making the beds, and chancing to look out of an upper window she saw a very curious sort of creature coming up to the house, for the body and bush of the fox were quite concealed by the sack and only the paws and the nose of the animal could be seen. So the hen hopped down stairs at a great rate and told the cat and the mouse that a visitor was approaching.

"Who'll open the door?"

"I won't," said the cat, and "I won't," said the mouse.

"Well, I'll open it myself," said the little red hen.

A rat-tat tat was heard, and after combing her head smooth with her claws and trying on a clean apron, she opened the door, and the fox sprang in, the sack falling off as he did so. The cat ran up the chimney, and the mouse squeezed himself into a little hole in the floor, while the poor little red hen got behind the door and tried to hide herself.

Not a living thing was to be seen. But the fox is a cunning animal, and he walked across the floor on tiptoe and peeped up the chimney. A tail appeared just within reach, and Mr. Reynard crept back for his sack, and seizing upon pussy's tail, in a moment she was out of the chimney and in the sack.

Foxey clapped his hands, and thought what a clever creature he was, and then looked about for the rest of the inhabitants. Alas! it was plain their tails were doomed to betray them, for peeping out of the hole in the floor was what looked like a little piece of stick; but Reynard was too wise not to know what it meant, and in a moment he had the mouse in his paws. She bit them as she could, but he only snapped his teeth at her, and put her into his sack with the cat. Then he looked about for No. 3.

Poor little red hen! She might have escaped but a gleam of sunshine came under the door and showed a shadow of the feathers moving just over the place where her heart beat so fast, and Reynard pulled the door open and seized upon her, popped her head foremost into his sack.

He had got all he wanted so he threw the sack across his shoulders, and trotted off in a state of extreme satisfaction with his morning's work.

Meantime the cat, the mouse and the little red hen had been talking over their melancholy situation.

"What was to be done?"

"I don't know," said the cat and "I don't know," said the mouse.

"Well, let us think awhile," said the little red hen.

So they thought, and they thought.

"Now who has a plan of escape?"

"I have not," said the cat, "I have not," said the mouse.

"I have one myself," said the little red hen.

Now the day was very hot, and the fox began to feel rather tired, and as he was sure his mother would not expect him home so early, he threw himself down upon a nice soft turf of moss, and proceeded to tie up the mouth of the sack very carefully. Then laid it beside him, and fell fast asleep.

When the little red hen heard him snoring she jumped up in great haste.

"Who has got a pair of scissors?"

"I have not," said the cat, and "I have not," said the mouse.

"I have them myself," said the little red hen. "Who has got needles and thread?"

"I have not," said the cat, and "I have not," said the mouse.

"I have them myself," said the little red hen.

Then she cut a slit in the sack with her pair of scissors, and told the mouse to leap out and fetch her a stone about his own size. So he did as he was bid; and then she made the hole larger, and sent out the cat to fetch another stone. And when she had placed the stone and moss in the sack, she told them to run away home, and she would follow them.

So she got her needles and thread ready, and, springing out of the sack she placed a stone in her stead, and sewed up the hole as fast as possible, watching the fox now and then. Once he stirred, and she felt her heart beat; but it was only because an ant stung his leg; and she finished her task, and set off as fast as feet and wings would carry her after her companions, overtaking them just as they came to the door of the house.

Presently the fox began to dream of his mother; so he started and awoke in a great fright, and taking up his sack he continued his journey.

"Dear me, how heavy these creatures are!" he thought, "and how they hurt my back with their hard bones! Never mind; my mother will be pleased for once in her life."

So he looked up and there was old Madame Fox at her door, shading her eyes from the sun with her fore paw, and watching for him. She saw he had a heavy load and greeted him affectionately.

"So there you are, my good son; and what have you brought your old mother?"

"A cat, and a mouse, and a little red hen. Here they are."

And the dutiful son was going to lay down his burden upon the floor, when his mother stopped him.

"I've got my new iron pot boiling upon the fire, my son. Just untie your sack, and empty it into the pot. It will save us a great deal of trouble in skinning and plucking., But what's this?" as the heavy stones fell and smashed her new pot. "You wicked fellow! Were you mocking your mother, and breaking her pot, and scalding her? See what you will catch!"

And hobbling over to the corner, she seized upon the post-stick, and never listened to her son's cries or entreaties for justice, she belabored him till he rushed out of the house and over the hills—so far away that he never again was seen in the neighborhood.

Old Mrs. Fox, becoming hungry towards evening, went out to look for a partridge or leveret, but placing her foot upon a trap set for a cat, she broke her leg, and was killed by a keeper next morning; and the squire, as he could not keep her alive to be hunted, took her face and her hush, and nailed them up to his stable-door, so that every one who came into the yard might think he had been first in the hunting-field.

And the cat, and the mouse, and the little hen led very peaceful lives now that their cruel neighbors were dead and gone.—Bright Side.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Step of Man.

At a recent sitting of the French Academy of Sciences, Monsieur Marey read a very interesting paper, giving the result of his experiments with a machine for measuring the length and rapidity of man's strides in walking. The machine, called the odograph, consists of a cylindrical body containing clock work which causes the cylinder to revolve at the uniform rate of 2-36 inches an hour. A pen is so arranged as to trace a line on paper rolled around the cylinder, and the track made by this pen shows the rapidity of the footsteps of the person to whom it is attached. An air valve is placed in the sole of the shoe, and it communicates with the instrument by means of a rubber tube leading up the trowsers' leg. Each time that the foot strikes the ground a slight puff of air is sent through the tube, causing the pen (which would otherwise mark only a horizontal line) to rise a distance equal to 0-004 of an inch. Thus a line is traced on the paper from left to right, rising at a greater or less angle with the horizontal according as the rapidity of the step is increased or diminished. If a man stepped exactly 3 feet at each step it is evident that in going 3,000 feet the pen would rise just 0·4 of an inch, but it was found in practice that the distance the pen was raised varied between 0·51 and 0·67 of an inch, showing that the average step varied in length from 2½ to 2 feet.

Mons. Marey found that a number of circumstances modified the length of the step. His experiments were made with soldiers from the young recruits to the bronzed veteran, and as they knew nothing of the objects of the experiments, their walk may be regarded as absolutely natural.

From the large number of trials made certain facts were positively determined as follows: The step is longer going uphill than in going down, longer for a man carrying a load than for one unloaded; longer with low heels than with high heels; and longer for a man wearing thick soles and those which project slightly beyond the toe than for one wearing short and flexible soles. It was found that while the heel might be lowered indefinitely without detriment to the gait, the sole could not be made perfectly rigid nor prolonged too far without interfering with the speed and ease of the wearer. Experience alone was able to determine the exact length and thickness necessary to produce the best results.

The rapidity of the step and its regularity could be determined to a nicety. If the rapidity of the step did not change, the line drawn on the paper would keep a regular fixed angle with the horizontal; but if the step quickened, an increased angle would result, making the line curve upward; and if it slackened, the curve would have its concavity downward, these results being, of course, irrespective of the length of the step. Sometimes, as in going uphill, the length of step increased while its rapidity slackened; but on a level it was found that hastening the step caused an insensible increase in its length also.—Scientific American.

FUNGI.

Matched, perhaps, for beauty of coloring, to the rose-tangles and conferve of the seas, are our land tribe of beautiful coloring, but low vegetable rank, the fungi; which, though of ill repute because of their parasitic nature—of their borrowed life—yet exhibit gorgeous dyes and delicate hues, delightful and surprising. The rapidity of these remarkable growths gives a touch of romance to their forms, which is added to by their weird way of appearing in unlooked-for places.

Whence these fungi come has been a subject of much dispute, but it is supposed that the minute seeds, or spornles, are carried by the air, insects, etc., to remote places, where they lie awaiting the proper conditions to spring up. The botanist, M. Fries, reckoned two million of these seeds to one fungus, and with such a reprodnctive power who can wonder that the whole earth is familiar with their various growths?

Fungi form no woody fiber; their growth is purely cellular; but many become hard and horny as they grow. They occupy an intermediate position between algæ and lichens, and resemble both in their different conditions. They are mere aggregations of homogeneous cells, differ widely in their forms, coloring and consistency, being in some conditions almost fluid, and varying in different features through all the conditions of fleshy, papery, corky, horny, etc., while at the same time their colors range from the dun, wan colors visible in the molds and mildews of familiar occurrence to the gorgeous dyes of the richest flower hearts. Their size is variable as their color; now appearing as a stain or speck upon an even surface, as upon the leaves of pears and other plants which they destroy, and upon fabrics which have been exposed an immoderate time to dampness without fresh air; now springing into minute hairs, or threads, as in the common mold which attacks our food; then rising in leaf-like form over the woody fiber upon which they are feeding; throwing out pale disks over some unexpected corner of our lawn, or rising in velvety orange-colored spots on the boards of our garden fence or walk; springing into the wonderful puff-balls that grow to such a marvelous size in a night.

In humid climates favorable to their production fungi grow to a surprising height, and wear their most attractive colors. The blight in corn, the diseases known as rust, ergot, etc., the dry-rot, so destructive to shipping and all buildings where it appears, are but different forms of fungi, and each lives at the expense of the object upon which it forms. In this parasitic trait they differ from the lichens, which, though growing upon or clinging to other objects, derive their nourishment from the atmosphere. Though the two classes approach each other so closely in some forms that it is difficult sometimes to distinguish them, the character of obtaining life by the death of other vegetables cannot be attached to the lichens.

In other countries much use has been made of the fungus tribe where the edible kinds are considered enjoyable, and in Australia they are eagerly hunted for by animals. The variety known as the truffle grows underground, and is very rough upon the outside, but within is quite white; it is sought for by the assistance of dogs trained to scent the fungus, which otherwise it would be almost impossible to discover. The morel, another species of fungus, grows in beech woods, in mushroom form, and is much delighted in by many. Fungi as articles of diet have never become popular in this country, probably because of the difficulty of deciding between the harmless and dangerous classes, although the mushroom finds important place on many tables. During the late civil war an effort was made by a mycologist of the South, the Rev. M. A. Curtis, to make use of this great growth as a food of supply; he found many of our native varieties not only safe and edible but very enjoyable.—Christian Union.

The Young Corporal.

A lad, a corporal in the French army, when drunk, struck his superior officer. This was a very serious offence. He was tried by court-martial and sentenced to be shot. The unhappy youth was cast into prison to await the execution of the sentence.

There was an effort made to secure his pardon, but without success. The colonel, however, was much attached to him, and was unremitting in his efforts to procure a pardon, which he at length succeeded in doing, on condition that if ever known to be drunk again he should be shot dead.

The colonel went to the prison to inform the condemned young corporal of his pardon.

"Ah! colonel," said the unhappy young man, as the officer entered; you see what my folly has brought me to."

"Suppose," said the colonel, "that I should tell you that, on condition that you never in your life drink again, a pardon is extended to you?"

A gleam of hope brightened the young man's face.

"Your life being the forfeit if ever you taste liquor again," added the colonel.

"Impossible!" said the poor lad. "I cannot live and not drink. Must I never drink?"

"Never."

The poor young fellow relapsed into hopelessness.

"Nothing could keep me from it. It would be impossible to keep the condition."

"I want but your word and pledge of honor as a soldier!" said the colonel, appealing to the military spirit and high sense of honor he so well knew the youth to possess.

The lad's soul kindled within him. The appeal wrought the effect intended. It was not in vain.

"See! colonel!" cried the young soldier; "see here and now," and he lifted his arm toward heaven, "that never to my dying day will I put liquor to my lips again."

The lad became commander of the Imperial Guard whose very name became such a power, and he kept the pledge in the same spirit that characterized his memorable utterance, "The Old Guard dies but never surrenders!"

Now you see, boys and girls how much that sting of the liquor servant costs. It came very near costing that brave young corporal his life.

It is a very costly sting to this country in dollars and cents. It costs us three hundred and sixty times as much as it does to pay the salaries of all the ministers of the Gospel. The salaries of our ministers amount to sixty millions of dollars, and it costs us twenty-two hundred millions of dollars to keep up the liquor traffic and keep this sting of the liquor serpent doing its work.—Richard Newton.

Minerals in North Carolina.

Mr. H. C. Lewis communicated the following list of minerals which he had found near Dobson, Surry county, N. C., during a recent visit to that locality:

Native sulphur, galena, pyrrhotine, pyrite, chalcopyrite, hematite, menaccanite, magnetite, limonite, hausmanite, psilomelane, wad, hornblende, actinolite, asbestos, garnet, talc, steatite, ripidolite, chlorite.

The psilomelane occurred in a bed about 18 feet in thickness.

The magnetite was frequently polar. Native sulphur occurred in cavities in quartzite as a coarse loose powder of rounded wax-like, grains, and was the result of the decomposition of the pyrite.

It was also stated that rutile occurred in Alexander county, N. C., a new locality.—Scientific American.

The terms of contract between J. A. Cloud of New York, and Edwin E. Burruss of Wilmington and their associates of the one part and the City of Wilmington of the other part, have been ratified and confirmed, and water works are to be completed in this city by eight months from the 9th November inst.

Messrs. Geo. Snow and W. W. Fuller, of Raleigh, were in Asheville Tuesday, to attend to the sale of some 10,000 acres of land in this county, claimed by the State University. Messrs. V. S. Lusk and W. G. Candler bought it for $112.00.—Asheville Citizen.

The authorities of the W. N. C. R. R. are now changing the guage of the road to conform to that of the R. & D. R. R. Work began Tuesday morning and is progressing rapidly. Something over 200 hands are employed. The first wide guage engine will perhaps reach here this evening—the work will then be about half completed.—Hickory Press.

The news of a horrible murder was brought to this city yesterday. On Saturday night, as Berry Bunch, colored, a resident of Mark's Creek township, sat in his house with his family, some unknown person fired on him through an opening between the logs of the house. The contents of the gun lodged in his head, producing almost instant death.—Raleigh News and Observer.

A Word to Our Readers.

When you read of a remedy that will cure all diseases beware of it; but when you read of a pure vegetable compound which claims to cure only certain parts of the body, and furnishes high proof that it does this, you can safely try it and with the assurance that it will help you. This is just what Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure does. It cures all troubles of the lower portion of the body and none others. It will not help the tooth-ache, ear-ache nor consumption but it will put your body in a vigorous and healthy state where you can enjoy life and appreciate its good things. Try it.

EXTRACTS FROM A YOUNG LADY'S LETTERS HOME.

NEW YORK, October 12.

I have been taking a round of the great stores—Arnolds, and Macys, and Stewarts, and Lords, &c. The fall opening of goods and imported dresses are wonderful—some wonderful for oddity, some for beauty and all for expense. Everything seems run wild in colors. I saw a dress from Worth's yesterday, a scarlet velvet, trimmed with gold brocade: price $500. By gaslight it looked like a house on fire. The peacock-blue and old-gold colors are much worn yet. I am trying to be very reasonable myself, for the dress I chose cost only $250. It is white satin, hand-printed with clusters of moss rose buds and trailing delicate vines. * * * The goods are magnificently arranged in the shop windows: dresses on stands, pyramids six feet high of artificial flowers, dress goods in columns stiff with brocade and embroidery. Everything is done so artistically and to catch and please the eye. You can't but advance a part of your education in merely walking through these streets and stores. At every moment you see something to astonish, or delight, or instruct you. You get so many new ideas and notions. * * * I haven't seen a single overskirt since I came. Of course the effect of the trimming is the same, but the expense and trouble are both much less. O do, somebody, send and ask me to get some of these brocaded ribbons for them! Only 35 cents a yard. I want to have the pleasure of buying some of them.

* * * * * *

October 13th.—The first ride on the Elevated Railroad certainly gives one a new sensation. It is precisely like flying through the air, and it is fearful to think of the narrow rail you are on, and look at the crowds of people over whose heads you are flying. The turns are so sharp. At some of them those sitting in a middle car can see the engine and the hindmost car at the same time. I should be sorry to live on a street through which this road runs. We went up to High Bridge, on the Harlem river, the other day, and stood on the bridge a long time looking at the many boats, the flying trains, the changing foliage.

* * * * * *

Last Saturday I was at Central Park to see the corner-stone of the great Egyptian obelisk laid. Some twenty thousand people were said to be present, and I stood jammed in a crowd for two mortal hours waiting for the long procession of Masons, and brass-bands, and carriages. Not a word of the speaking did I hear, and came away satisfied to have witnessed such a ceremony once in my life. I am also satisfied to have seen once a vast political torch-light procession. We sat on the steps of a brown-stone house some two and a half hours. To be seen the sight was worth the fatigue: the soldiers in bright uniform, the banners, the torches, the cannon, the fireworks, the music, the fine horses—and then the crowd! They say four hundred thousand people were out. And it was all so orderly, plenty of policemen about, but no fusses. I did enjoy it exceedingly, though I wonder how we got home out of that vast multitude. You seem to lose the sense of your own identity, as if you were carried along in a dream.

* * * * * *

Last Sunday we went to hear Dr. Deems preach. His church is a plain one, the congregation good, and good looking and attentive. The Doctor's manner is so lively, so impressive. I don't wonder he is popular. It is that liveliness that draws a congregation. Rev. Mr. Betts, of North Carolina has the manner, almost conversational, and putting familiar truths in an unfamiliar way to freshen them. We have been over to Brooklyn to hear Dr. Talmage, and the same thoughts occurred to me. It is the manner, the sprightliness of expression. Yet, of course, there must be great power of some kind lying behind this to keep a congregation, and to attract twice every Sunday, such crowds. Dr. T. is rather homely and insignificant looking, has a peculiar voice, uses fine language, rather too flowery. I liked his prayers. One began: "We come, gracious Master, to the great Fountain with empty pitchers, and to the great Light with unlighted torches." His church is showy, semicircular, and filled. The crowd was immense. We got out of the church and into a street car with difficulty. I enjoyed coming across East River at night. The many lights from the boats and the bright track of moonlight on the water, were beautiful.

* * * * * *

October 20th.—No, no! there is not the least danger of my loving plain things at home, or old North Carolina any the less for all that I see and hear and enjoy so keenly here. But yet I can understand how it is that people who come here and live awhile, and work, and see how things are carried on here—with what force, and energy, and precision, and success—with what liberality, too, I can see how they do get a kind of disgust with their own State, and thank their stars they are out of it. The splendid, open-handed liberality towards so many great public charities is one of the most striking things. One is bound to compare with what one has seen at home. The poverty of the South presses on your mind. Our people can't give as these people do. Well, then, some of them recognize the fact that they can't live at home. They come here where their services are appreciated and paid for at their full value. The money is not begrudged them, and the consequence is they feel impatient of North Carolina industries and North Carolina ways of doing. They do love her, they never cease to be Southerners in heart, but they can't stand the stagnation.

* * * * * *

I find the Northern people I meet very curious about the South. They ask no end of questions, and it is so amazing to find people of education and some cultivation so ignorant of any part of their native country. They know no more of North Carolina—of her towns, of her institutions, of her products, of her immense mineral wealth—than I do of Australia. It is just as if we were a foreign country to them. I want you to send me a box of our beautiful autumn leaves of all sorts and some cotton bolls in various stages of growth, and some sheafs of mica, and some great heads of millet, &c. I want to have them to show. The girls at Cooper are just as kind and polite to me as they can possibly be. I shall be so glad to show them some of these things from North Carolina. Wherever I go shall only good be known of the dear old State. There let me live or die, whatever other people do.

October 22d.—I have got quite beyond octagonal blocks and cylinders and am drawing now (in crayon) from plaster casts. Every other afternoon I take lessons in painting on china. I found it very difficult at first. Instead of oils to mix the paints, turpentine is used, and as much work as possible must be done with one stroke of the brush. The paints are mineral. We have china plates or tiles about six inches square to paint on. Our teacher gives her own designs. My first one was a wild rose. Our china is not unbaked. It is glazed just as you see common crockery in the stores. After painting it is sent to a furnace to be burnt in. The colors change in firing, and you have to calculate for that in painting. If your work is not good you can easily rub it out before it is burnt.

I draw steadily four hours a day: and to prove how steady I am, a letter from you was handed me just as I started one day, and I kept it in my pocket all the morning and did not open it till I went to lunch. The girls in my alcove all wondered how I could do it, and if I had chosen I suppose I might have read it. The rules are very strict. Lots of the young ladies are unpunctual, and read novels besides, for grown people can't be treated like children, and if one chooses to cheat one's self, it can be done. I never did believe in anything of that sort. I can say with a clear conscience that I never deliberately wasted an hour of time that I was paying for. Then I had the letter to look forward to, and what a pleasure to dash home to lunch and tear it open the minute I sat down to the table.

Crayon work is what you may call dirty work. My hands are as black as soot every day, and the crayon actually gets into my hair. But I like all the work I am doing, and I like the people I am associated with. I find everybody kind, and helpful, and pleasant. They couldn't possibly be nicer if they were all Southerners.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

TIMIDITY OR COWARDICE, WHICH?

A great deal that passes under the name of timidity is really only cowardice—and especially among Christians. This is too grave, and too melancholy an assertion to venture, if it was not the assertion of a fact.

How many Christians are there who as an excuse for not talking with their friends on the subject of religion, will say quickly, and with a shade of humility on the face, "Oh, I am too timid, I have not courage to talk to him, but I can pray, and I do pray for him, but I can never talk!" Now the spirit that prompts one to desire a thing very earnestly, to pray for it very eagerly, is very apt to be a brave spirit—and ready and willing to speak.

And then, as regards that other question of how much self-denial one may dare to practice for the Master. How many make the mistake of calling their cowardice timidity, here too?

"I am afraid people will think me censorious and unsocial if I decline to take part in the social dissipations of my town." I am so afraid that some one may think I am condemning him, and so on. Now is that the spirit of genuine timidity—the outcome of Christian humility or is it not rather, the cowardice of the natural heart—"that fear of man that bringeth a snare?" A sort of wolf in sheep's clothing? Yes, a wolf for this mock timidity is a beast of prey, one that is ever on the watch for our best intentions—our good impulses—and ready to devour them at sight.

There is work to be done in the Church, the poor and the sick are to be looked after, a mission to be started, the children of the Sunday school to be waked up and put to work. And somebody must do it. But everybody seems to be afraid of—what?

Time flies, and in these days of gigantic events, vast enterprises, and of tremendous calamities, individual efforts, even the greatest seem small, and we have no time to dally with so-called timidity. The servant of the Lord must be up and doing, not in his own feeble strength, but armed with the strong promise of the Eternal. "As thy day so shall thy strength be." And so "strengthened with all might according to His glorious power," we will be "faithful in all good works, and increase in the knowledge of God."

REPORT OF THE AGENT OF SABBATH SCHOOLS.

[Approved by the Synod of North Carolina and published in the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN at the request of the Synod.]

Every Presbytery has this year sent your Agent a Sabbath school report.

There are 153 Sabbath schools in our Presbyteries, of which Concord reports 30, Fayetteville 34, Mecklenburg 33, Orange 35 and Wilmington 21. They embrace 1,219 teachers and 9,531 scholars, with an average attendance of three-fourths of them, and distributed as follows: Concord 261 teachers and 2,227 scholars, Fayetteville 277 teachers and 2,071 scholars, Mecklenburg 235 teachers and 2,149 scholars, Orange 312 teachers and 2,146 scholars, Wilmington 134 teachers and 938 scholars.

A cheering increase is shown of 659 scholars over the number reported last year, and an increase of 1,304 scholars over 1878. For ty-four teachers and three hundred and ninety-eight scholars were added to the communion roll of the church, a total of 442 additions from the Sabbath schools. Of these additions Concord and Mecklenburg furnished the largest numbers, the former 190 and the latter 132.

The contributions for school purposes amounted to $1,156, and for general benevolence $1,009, a total of $2,165. Of this sum Mecklenburg and Orange gave each over $600, Fayetteville $452, Concord $390 and Wilmington $112. But the gifts for general beneficence came from only forty-six schools, most of them reporting no separate contributions, according to the urgent recommendation of both Synod and General Assembly.

Some mission schools are thrown out by our churches, and four schools among the colored people are reported, viz: two each in Orange and Mecklenburg, with an aggregate of more than 200 scholars.

Thus there appears to be, on the whole, a more vigorous activity and wholesome progress in this department of our Church's work in this Synod. It appears as if our great need now is to urge our backward and non-reporting churches kindly but urgently to earnest effort in this good cause; to carry out fully our plans for active sessional supervision; to use the helps provided by our Publication Committee, and especially now, in view of all our surroundings, to establish and foster teachers' meetings and social normal classes for the increase of general scriptural and specific doctrinal training. Careful study is demanded for truly successful teaching, and clear and simple presentation of the truth from both the private and public teacher. We believe that then the Church will be able to use most successfully, with the help of the Holy Spirit, this great arm for the Master's work in saving immortal souls.

ADDRESS TO THE CHURCHES.

[Adopted by the Synod of North Carolina and ordered to be read to the Churches. Published in the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN by the request of the Synod.]

The Synod of North Carolina to the churches under its care sendeth greeting. "Grace be unto you and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ." "We give thanks to God and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ praying always for you."

DEARLY BELOVED: At the close of another Synodical year, it is meet that we should again carefully take our reckonings, that we may know our condition as a church; where we are and whither we are tending.

The reports from the several Presbyteries on the state of religion are before us and contain facts which should fill us with profound thanksgiving to God for His continued mercy unto our people; and also, facts which show that very much remaineth to be done in the great work of perfecting the saints, and in taking possession of the regions without, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ our Head and King.

We would, Dear Brethren, record our thanksgiving to God for His goodness unto us and unto you, in so mercifully preserving the lives and health of our ministry: and notwithstanding all our unworthiness, not removing the candlestick of divine truth from its place, and not suffering the fire to be extinguished on our altars. The great interests of Foreign Missions, Domestic Missions, Ministerial Support, Education and Publication, during the past year, have received commendable attention. Our people in the main, at least in theory, acknowledge the obligation which rests upon them to honor the Lord with their substance. But while this is true, it is evident that as yet we have not reached the measure of duty in the matter of giving for the support and spread of our holy religion.

As a proof of this hear the unanswered cry of the heathen world imploring us to come over and help them; and see the stolid indifference and religious ignorance which brood over many of the highways and hedges within our own bounds; and especially consider the insufficient support given many of our ministers.

If we include all our churches, city, town and country, the average salary paid the ministry in this Synod is not more than $650, and if we leave out of the count the city churches and larger town churches, the average salary is not above $400. The effects of this insufficient ministeral support are exceedingly sad to behold. They are these: many of our ministers are forced into secular engagements, in order to supplement their income, and live under the great life-shadow, that they neither are meeting, nor can meet their ordination engagements. And many of our churches, from lack of a more thorough and watchful ministerial oversight, "stand for awhile like the deserted temple of a deceased oracle, and then sink into a hasty age and so descend into ruin." Perhaps the worst injury a church can inflict on herself is to support insufficiently her minister. Such a course weakens the arm that wields the shepherd's rod, and exposes the lambs and the sheep alike to the horrors of starvation and the attacks of the enemy.

But there is another thing, Dear Brethren, to which we desire to call your attention. In reading the scriptures, you have noticed that the people of God are called "the lights of the world," "the salt of the earth;" and they are exhorted to let their light so shine before men that others seeing their good works may glorify our Father which is in Heaven; and, even, to be perfect as our Father which in Heaven is perfect. The meaning of such teaching as this cannot be doubtful.

It is the Head of the Church calling upon His people to consider their true position in this world,—to realize their duties both to God and man,—in a word, to live out their religion. This living out our religion in the home circle, in the business sphere, in adversity and prosperity, is, we conceive, one of the great needs of the time.

Our religious inheritance transmitted to us under God, through the suffering of our forefathers, is a goodly one. They toiled and suffered, and we are entered into their labours. Theirs was a dispensation of suffering. Ours is pre-eminently one of living out the blessed doctrines of grace we have received.

Let us then, forgetting the things which are behind, reach forth to those that are before. Let us heed the exhortations, which tell us to abhor that which is evil; to be not conformed to this world; to deny ourselves and take up our cross and follow the Master. Let us draw our inspiration from the words of our enthroned Redeemer, which say: "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life."

The Synod sends you its salutations. "Grace be with you all: Amen."

MY LOST SELF.

BY MARY AINGE DE VERE.

You wonder why my eyes are dim with tears.
Then, shall I tell you? Long and long ago—
So long ago! years piled on weary years—
There was a little child I used to know.

And every day and night and every hour
We took life's gift together, sun and shade,
And saw the rainbow shining through the shower;
And heard the talk that building robins made.

We thought the world was ours, to come and go
About its highways, finding treasures rare;
We thought all heaven was ours, and fashioned so
Grand castle after castle high in air!

Ah! now I find the world a desert wild;
No room in all the sky for tower of mine.
But most of all I miss my comrade child:
Her brave, true courage and her faith divine.

Dead? Changed? I know not, sweet; I only know
That sometimes from the mirror's shining space,
In my own features, worn and faded so,
I catch a glimmer of the bright lost face.

You will no longer wonder that I weep,
My little girl with eyes so grave and clear;
Whatever treasure we may hold or keep
To lose one's happy self is saddest, dear!

REPORT OF THE AGENT OF PUBLICATION.

[Approved by the Synod of North Carolina, and published in the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN by the request of the Synod.]

Your Agent reports:

First. The contributions to this cause in the bounds of the Synod.

According to the reports of the Presbyteries the sums respectively collected by them for the year ending April 1, 1880, are as follows: Concord, $146; Fayetteville, $175; Mecklenburg, $213; Orange, $178; Wilmington, $69. Total, $781.

Compared with the amount collected the previous year there is a gain of $14.

According to the report of the Secretary of Publication, the amounts received for the same time into the treasury at Richmond are as follows:

Concord, $29 42; Fayettoville, $88 05; Mecklenburg, $129 50; Orange, $125 28; Wilmington, $129 81. Total, $502 06.

Showing a decrease of $125 42 as compared with the receipts of last year.

Very considerable proportions of their contributions were retained in their own hands by some of the Presbyteries for the colportage work, which fact accounts for the large excess in the amounts as reported by them, over the receipts reported by the Committee of Publication.

Eighty-nine of our two hundred and twenty-six churches, or thirty-nine per cent., reported no contributions. The membership in these churches constitutes twenty-seven per cent. of the whole. The average contribution to this cause has been four cents per member throughout the Synod.

Second, Colportage.—This important work does not appear to have been prosecuted with vigor in any of the Presbyteries the last year. There has not been a colporteur in the field. Funds have been raised for the work in some of the Presbyteries and arrangements are making for the entering upon the work at as early a period as possible. It is recommended that the resolution on this subject, adopted by the last Synod be reaffirmed.

General Remarks.—We believe there has been improvement in our bounds in the matter of the patronage of our own Sabbath school periodicals and literature. The action of the Synod and of the Presbyteries in the last year or two, in calling the special attention of the churches to this subject has not been without practical effect. It is recommended that this action be again reaffirmed.

[The resolutions thus reaffirmed have been published.]

A CONSTANT SALVATION.

BY THEO. L. CUYLER, D. D.

A clipper ship crossing the Banks of Newfoundland in heavy weather strikes an iceberg. She settles rapidly at the bow, and her captain and crew have barely time to leap into the life-boat. The question, "What must we do to be saved?" is answered by their prompt leap into the life-boat, which is an act of faith. They trust their lives to it for salvation. From immediate death they are saved.

But after the ship has sunk, the crew are still out in the deep and dangerous ocean. There is a second process necessary. In order to keep out of the trough of the sea, and to reach the distant shore, they must stick to the boat and pull lustily at the oars. They must "work out their salvation" now by hard rowing. But this is a continued process of salvation day after day, until they reach the shores of Nova Scotia. Never for a moment, however, are they independent of the life-boat. That must keep them afloat, or they go to the bottom. At last, after hard rowing, they reach the welcome shore. This is their third, final, and complete salvation; for they are entirely beyond the perils of the treacherous sea. Now they are at rest, for they have reached the desired haven.

This homely parable will illustrate with sufficient clearness the three ways in which the word salvation is employed in God's Word and in human experience. The first leap into the life-boat illustrates that decisive act of the soul in quitting all other worthless reliances and throwing itself on Christ Jesus, in simple, believing trust. This is conversion. By it the soul is delivered from the guilt and condemnation of sin.

The Holy Spirit is active in the step—cleansing and renewing the heart. By this act of surrender to Christ, the sinner escapes from death into life. He may joyfully cry out, "By the grace of God I am saved!"

Yet this converted believer is no more independent of Christ as a Saviour than those sailors were of that life-boat. For until he reaches the consummated deliverance of Heaven (which is what the word "salvation" signifies in Psalm xci: 16,) he must be clinging to Christ Jesus every day. And it is this daily and hourly salvation that we wish to emphasize at present. Too many people limit the word to the initial step of converting faith and falsely concluded that nothing more is to be done. A certain school of rather mystical Christians so magnify this act of receiving the "gift of eternal life" in Christ that they quite forget the fact that a vast deal of head winds, hard rowing, conflict with the Devil and remaining lusts, must be encountered.

There is a very important sense in which every true servant of Christ is obliged to "work out his salvation" every day of his life, if he lives a century. It was not to impenitent sinners or to anxious inquirers that Paul addressed the famous injunction: "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling." He was addressing the blood-bought Church at Philippi. And, if he were alive to-day, he might well ring these solemn words into the ears of every Christian in the land. For, if our original deliverance from the condemnation of sin and desert of hell depended on our surrender to Christ, so our constant salvation from the assaults of sin depends upon our constant obedience to his commandments. Faith without works is dead. Brethren, we may be in the life-boat; but the life-boat is not heaven. There is many a hard tug at the oar, many a night of tempest, many a danger from false lights, and many a send under bare poles (with pride's "top hamper" all gone), before we reach the shining shore. To the last moment on earth our salvation depends on complete submission to Jesus. Without him, nothing; with him, all things.

Please bear in mind that salvation signifies simply the process of saving. Our Blessed Master means to save us and our lives for Himself, if we will let Him do it and will honestly co-operate with Him. Yonder is an acre of weeds which its owner wishes to save from barrenness to fruitfulness. So he subjugates it with plow and harrow and all the processes of cultivation. If the soil should cry out against the plow share and the harrow and the hoe, the farmer's answer would be: Only by submission to this discipline can I reap the golden crop which shall be to you a credit and to me a glory. In like manner, by absolute submission to Christ's will, by constant obedience to His pure commandments, by the readiness to be used by Him entirely for His own purposes, can you or I be saved to life's highest end. The instant that I realize entirely that I am Christ's, I must also realize that my time must be saved from waste for Him, and my influence must be consecrated to Him. All accumulation is by wise saving. Sin means waste, and ends in ruin and remorse. The honest, devoted Christian is literally "working out his salvation" when he is daily striving to redeem his time, and employ his utmost capacity, and use his every opportunity, to make his life a beautiful offering and possession for his Lord. If we were not worth saving our Lord would never have tasted the bitter agonies of Golgotha to redeem us. If every saved follower is by and by to be presented by Christ "faultless, with exceeding joy," then is a Christian life a jewel worthy of his diadem. Oh my soul! let Him work in me to will and to do according to His good pleasure, if I can be made to yield this reverence of honor to my beloved Lord.

There is another sense in which Christ furnishes us a constant salvation. His presence saves me in the hour of strong temptation. He keeps me from falling in a thousand cases where I do not directly recognize His hand. When I wake up in the morning, after a night ride in a Pullman car, I do not know how many human hands have been busy in order that I might ride safely through the pitch darkness. And when I get to heaven, perhaps I may find out how often Jesus interposed to save me from threatened ruin, from unsuspected dangers. He was saving me in a hundred ways that I did not dream of. And the visible acknowledged deliverances were all due to Him. Daily grace means a daily salvation. Paul lived thus in constant dependence, realizing that, if Christ withdrew His arm, he must sink in an instant. Not one moment can I dispense with the life-boat until my foot stands where "there is no more sea."

If these things be true, then we ought to be ever praying: "O, Lord! what must I do now to be saved? To be saved from waste of time; to be saved from dishonoring thee; to be saved from secret sin; and to be saved up to the fullest, richest, holiest service of thyself!" He can help us to accomplish all this, for His grace can bring us a full salvation. When we reach heaven, we will no longer need to be saved. The voyage will be over, the dangers ended. The multitudes who have been saved will then walk in the light of the New Jerusalem, and cast their crowns at the feet of Him who purchased for us so ineffably glorious and transcendent a salvation!—Independent.

THE TRUE STYLE OF SPEAKING.

On the whole, when once a man is master of himself and of his materials, the best rule that can be given him is to forget style altogether, and to think only of the reality to be expressed. The more the mind is intent on the reality, the simpler, truer, more telling the style will be. The advice which the great preacher gives for conduct holds not less for all kinds of writing: "Aim at things, and your words will be right without aiming. Guard against love of display, love of singularity, love of seeming originality. Aim at meaning what you say, and saying what you mean." When a man who is full of his subject and has matured his powers of expression sets himself to speak thus simply and sincerely, whatever there is in him of strength or sweetness, of dignity or grace, of humor or pathos, will find its way out naturally into his language. That language will be true to his thought, true to the man himself. Free from self-consciousness, free from mannerism, it will bear the impress of whatever is best in his individuality.—Sharp.

MAKE SOME HEART HAPPY.

Have you made one heart happy to-day? How calmly you can seek your pillow! how sweetly sleep! In all this world there is nothing so sweet as giving comfort to the distressed, as getting a sun-ray into a gloomy heart. Children of sorrow meet us wherever we turn; there is not a moment that tears are not shed and sighs uttered, yet how many of these sighs are caused by our own thoughtlessness! how many a daughter wrings the very soul of a fond mother by acts of unkindness and gratitude! How many husbands, by one little word, makes a whole day of sad hours and unkind thoughts! How many wives, by recrimination, estrange and embitter loving hearts! How many brothers and sisters meet but to vex each other, making wounds that no human power can heal! Ah! if each one worked upon this maxim day by day—"Strive to make some heart happy!"—jealousy, revenge, madness, hate, with their evil associates, would forever leave the earth.—Canada Presbyterian.

TIMID PEOPLE.

It is amusing, it is instructive, it is somewhat piteous to watch the behavior of timid people in this world. We are impatient at the humble martyrdoms to which they daily and hourly submit; we are puzzled by the contradictions of their conduct; we are astounded by what seems to us occasionally the dissimulation of their ways. We do not speak here of people who have a wholesome and beautiful grain of shyness in their souls, but of those inveterately, those incorrigibly timid folks who would almost seem to have come into the world scared by the sense of possessing an individuality of their own. An insuperable difficulty of saying "no" leads them into a network of intricacies. They can not viva voce refuse any suit, deny any request, dismiss any bore; they are disregarded by their servants, for they dare not tell them of their faults; their friends misunderstand them, for they shrink within themselves with a pertinacity that creates a solitude around them. When they would emerge out of this retreat to bless and comfort, their timidity overwhelms them, checks their utterance, or turns their soothing words into an awkward, perhaps a wounding phrase. When wound up to comparative boldness, they would reprove; their hints fall unheeded, or if their poor little shafts hit the mark, the wounds they give rankle more sorely, and are more resented than those inflicted in franker warfare.

These dissimulations of timid people are often a matter of perplexity to brave souls. They know that the tale of woe poured in their ear is humbug, yet they will murmur apologies for the smallness of their contributions to its relief. The glassy eye of the hore is fixed upon them. They will smile and answer to it and listen with every sign of interest to outponred platitudes. An acquaintance whose long visits are a weariness, eating up the long hours as a moth frets away a garment, is greeted by the timid, fearful of unmannerly behavior, with a cordiality that should only be bestowed upon the friend whom we hold in our heart's core. To the astonished spectator the timid would sometimes appear guilty of the blackest treachery. Their creed is attacked, their friend is ill-spoken of, and they do not lift up a protesting voice. They listen to the adversary in what might well be interpreted an acquiescing silence, or mutter some broken phrases, the feeble refutation of which is more puzzling to the bolder hearted than open treachery. The poor souls are keenly aware of their apparent duplicity; they despise themselves for their lack of spirit and honesty, but they can not help themselves, and are slaves of their shamefacedness.—London Queen.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from Exchanges:

The Rev. A. Kanhone, an ex-priest of the Church of Rome, has recently connected himself with the Presbyterian Church, and is at present studying at the Montreal Presbyterian College.

According to the Canadian Congregational Year-book there are in Canada and Newfoundland 116 churches, with nearly 8,000 members. The Canada Home Mission Society, exclusive of money given for special city work, raised last year $4,000.

Eighteen years ago the first Protestant church was organised in Rio Janeiro, and two persons received on confession. Since that time nearly three hundred have joined this one organisation, mostly converts from Rome.

Dr. Legge, Professor of Chinese at Oxford, says if the present rate of conversion of the Chinese to Christianity continues, by the year 1913 there will be 26,000,000 of Church members, and 100,000,000 of professing Christians in the Chinese Empire.

An agreement between the Vatican and the Russian Government upon questions of great religious interest has lately been signed, in consequence of which the relations between Russia and the Holy See, which have been interrupted for several years, resumed their regular course.

A step in the right direction has been taken by the directors of the Paris, Lyons, and Marseilles Railway, who have brought under consideration a proposal to enable every servant of the company to have a half or a whole day of rest every week, and, if possible, that it shall be on Sunday.

Rev. Charles Voysey, in disclaiming his reported intention to enter the Jewish community, admits his mental affinity with the Jewish faith. Writing to a Jewish organ, he says he "trusts that the deep accord which already exists between your faith and mine renders needless any more formal bond of union."

Thirty-three hundred and thirty dollars is a good offering for Home Missions by one church. The Third Presbyterian Church of Pittsburgh, Pa., secured that amount the other morning. It was a fitting sequence to a sermon by the pastor, the Rev. Chas. L. Thompson, D. D. The Christian at Work has the requisite space at command for reporting more such cases.

Father Ignatius, speaking at Sheffield on Friday evening, denied the statement telegraphed from London that he did not believe in the vision of the Virgin Mary at Llanthony Abbey. He recounted the story of the apparitions, the last of which he witnessed with his own eyes. He saw the heavens opened, and the Virgin come down in dazzling circles of light where she appeared to monks and boys. Marvellous cures had been effected by the vision.

At the close of the Waldensian Theological College in Florence the unprecedented number of twenty-four students presented themselves to the Board of Examiners. Five of these had completed their curriculum one or two years before, and had been engaged in mission work in the interval. The removal of this College from the Valleys of Piedmont has been a great success.

THE TITHING SYSTEM.

In all seriousness we regard the subject of the tithe—that is the question of its introduction as a rule of Christian giving—as calling for the most earnest consideration. At least it lies upon our conscience to have something to say upon this matter.

We believe the question demands attention at this time, and we are moved to this belief from a conviction that the plans, the methods, the modes of obtaining means for conducting the work of the Church are in all cases inadequate, in many cases absurd, and in some cases sinful. We need some system certainly—some practicable system, some efficient system—and the advocates of the tithing system claim that it is both practicable and efficient. At our request Rev. Mr. Houston has furnished a report of the practical outworking of the system, as far as tried, in his charge. It will be found in another column. We can readily see that there are many improprieties in our methods which the introduction of the tithe system would remove, and many positive results for good which it would accomplish.

Before us as we write we have a pamphlet from the pen of Rev. M. H. Honston, Taylorsville, Ky., entitled, "How is your minister supported?" We confess a deep interest in the subject as presented by Mr. Houston and would be glad to have the pamphlet circulated. Any review we could give in this place would be too scant for justice, but we may state that the anthor places the tithe fairly and squarely on the high plane of obedience to divine command, and that he argues the question in a calm, clear and entirely courteous manner.

The question comes up under more propitious circumstances than ever before, we think. It is not a question of the enforcement of the tithe by church discipline, but of the duty of Christians to surrender to God for His service one tenth of what He has given them. The appeal is directly to the consciences of Christians. It has heretofore been presented as a theory generally regarded as being impracticable; it now appears as a well-defined and well-supported theory, which has been put into practice. Mr. Houston will be glad to furnish the pamphlets referred to above at the rate of one dozen copies for one dollar.

THE TUSCALOOSA INSTITUTE.

We trust that the brief annual circular from the Assembly's Committee controlling this institute has been carefully read by all the pastors and people within our bounds, and that opportunity will be given to all to contribute to this important enterprise. Ever since the establishment of the Institute, some four or five years ago, we have had to lament a want of candidates for the ministry, seeking its advantages. Only a small number have hitherto been connected with the school, and scarcely half of those from our own Church. But, as the circular states, thirteen students are already in attendance, with the near prospect of several more, so that the total this session bids fair to reach nearly a score, and the majority of these regularly under care of many different Presbyteries.

It is to be noted, too, that all along these pupils have conducted themselves in such a manner as to entitle them to the confidence of our Committee, and those amongst whom they live. Surely, then, these facts, manifest in the Committee's circular, merit our careful attention. And as an increase in members necessarily involves an increase in expenditure, we hope all our congregations will bear these facts in mind, and remember this important work in their prayers and their gifts.

ARCTIC EXPLORATIONS.

A charm, all its own, attends the reading of narratives of Arctic explorations, and clearly a greater charm, amounting even to infatuation possesses those who encounter the fearful hardships and exposure of these journeyings. It would seem that all the ends and purposes for which these explorations have been prosecuted have been attained. The flora and the fauna of the frozen regions of the North have been discovered, studied, determined, classified and arranged; the solar bearings, the moon culminations, the magnetic and metereological facts if not so far as possible, at least so far as necessary, have been accurately ascertained, duly noted, and properly recorded. These contributions to science constitute perhaps the greater triumphs which are the results of so much danger, trial, suffering and death. But the geographical knowledge that has been acquired is not to be despised, albeit, when measured in the scale of practical utility the results do not appear of late years to be very great. We do not go back to the Cabots, to Davis, Hudson and even in nearer date to Parry and the Rosses—so associated in our mind with Peter Parley and his magazine—but we take up McClure who demonstrated by his expedition of 1850-'53 the practicability of sailing through Behring Straits from the Pacific, and returning home by Baffin's Bay. Yet no one has ever repeated that exploit, probably no one ever will, since we know it can be done. McClure and his crew were found ice bound and rescued by a later expedition. The Northwest passage and the open Polar sea more than one explorer is certain he has seen, or at least he has seen thereabout. We are a little incredulous, but we do not urge the matter. Sir Francis McClintock insists that Sir John Franklin discovered this Northwest Passage. If we do not misunderstand Dr. Kane he claimed to have done the same—and this before McClintock put in the claim for Franklin. On the eastern continent two Australian lieutenants, Payer and Weyprecht it is claimed did, by following the Gulf Stream northward between Spitzbergen and Nova Zembla, actually penetrate the open Polar Sea and trace a Northeast passage.

But let us go back. For many years the expeditions to the Arctic regions were much of the nature of crusades, inspired by the Lady Jane Franklin to ascertain the fate of her husband, Sir John Franklin, and heartily enlisting the sympathies and leading to the lavish expenditure of means of private individuals and of governments. We need not reconnt the failures partial or complete of successive parties of exploration. Sir Francis McClintock in the "Fox" obtained a vast quantity of relics of Sir John Franklin and his associates, and through Lieut. Hobson found the only documentary testimony, which has ever been secured; testimony which set at rest all doubt as to Sir John Franklin's fate—he died on 11th June, 1847—and, with the researches of travel, left no room for hope that any of Franklin's party had escaped starvation.

Yet these things were not enough, and Capt. Hall in the Polaris, and others, have prosecuted the search to learn the way and the place where Franklin's associates met their fate, and to recover records which they must have had with them. The last expedition, that of Lieutenant Schwatka has just returned after a two years' journey. A story which in its details proved to be false, led Lt. Schwatka to believe that relics of Franklin himself, with books and papers, were known by the Esquimaux to be in a cairn in King William's Land, and indnced him to proceed thither in hopes of securing them or other information of value. The following detail of the exploration and its results we take from the Popular Science Monthly:

The journey was in every way a formidable undertaking, having to be made on sledges many hundred miles across a totally unknown country, which had to be depended upon for food. The party consisted of four white men and thirteen Esquimaux, provided with but one month's provisions, but also amply supplied with the best and most accurate American guns, to whose perfection, as it proved, they are indebted for being able to successfully accomplish the task. The party left their camp upon Hudson Bay, which they had named Camp Daly on the 1st of April, 1879, and reached it again in March, after eleven months absence, having traveled more than three thousand miles, and experienced a degree of cold that seems incredible. The lowest temperatnre was 103 degrees below the freezing point, while the mean temperature of the month of November and December 1879, and Jannary, 1880, were minus 49 degrees, minus 50 degrees and minus fifty-three and two tenths degrees. In such temperatures as these any object sears the skin as a red-hot iron, the slightest wind burns the face, and meat, hot from a boiling pot, freezes before it can be eaten. The story of the wanderings of the Franklin explorers, as learned by this party from the natives, and as confirmed by their personal search, is terrible in the extreme. These men were but a few hundred miles from waters frequented by whalers, and yet they all perished, and perished so as to leave hardly any evidence of their journey. So far as it could be traced, it was by Lieutenant Schwatka's party, and the bones that were found at different points along the desolate shores of King William Land were buried. Only one skeleton could be identified—that of Lieutenant Irving,—and this was brought away by them. It was known by means of a medal found near by, which the natives, in their desecration of his grave, had forgotten to take. It was learned from the natives that one of the ships was sunk at a point about five miles west of Grant Point, near the Adelaide Peninsula. As the Esquimax did not know how to get in by the deck they cut a hole in the side on a level with the ice, through which they carried off what provisions and other things they could find, and in the spring when the ice broke up, the ship sank. Across this Adelaide Peninsula, at a point named Starvation Cove, evidences were found that it was here that the last remnant of the party perished, and with them the records, Lieutenant Schwatka believes that they were irrecoverably lost.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

In a note last week of Columbia Seminary and the action of the Synod with relation to it, our correspondent was made to say: "It is expected that Alabama and the rest of the Church will raise the full endowment of Dr. Woodrow's chair." What our correspondent wrote was: "It is expected that Alabama and the rest of the Church will raise the other $10,000, (of the $30,000 endowment of the Home Memorial Fund, South Carolina having engaged to raise $20,000.) Georgia undertakes to raise $15,000, the lacking half of the full endowment of Dr. Woodrow's chair."

If our friends will determine that in each congregation there shall be an earnest canvass for the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN, and if they will select a thorough, energetic person to see that the subject is properly presented to every family, hundreds of subscribers can be added to our list in the next month or two. Last season some of our ministers, and in other cases laymen took hold and accomplished wonders. Will not our friends see what can be done. This does not refer to congregations, of course, where regular agents have been acting. We acknowledge the inestimable services of such agents and have only to beg that they will make a grand round or two for us.

The British Parliament was to meet on 2d December, inst., but later advices state that it will be prorogued to January 6th. The question of land reform for Ireland will engage the Parliament when it assembles, but the question of public order demands precedence and will receive it. The present ministry are divided among themselves as to the best means for regulating land reform. It has been proposed that the government purchase the land and thus control the whole subject by letting to tenants, but even Great Britain will hardly enter upon such a tremendous undertaking. The evils, which are both real and serious, will be remedied doubtless by adequate and appropiate legislation, as to the modes and details of which there are differences of opinion; on one point, however, there is unanimity of counsel: order must first be restored. The government will yield nothing to force.

Latest accounts indicate less violence on the part of the rioters, but the Marquis of Lansdowne has fled to England from his estates in Kerry. He is charged with having exacted over $315,000 from tenants, whereas the rental by government valuation is only half that sum.

The Presbyterian of Philadelphia makes this note, and we present it to our readers for their reflection:

"Kansas, by a large majority, has established a prohibitory liquor law. The enforcement of it will be difficult, but it will be earnestly attempted. What has been effected in Maine may be learned from the following facts: The whole amount of tax on spirits and liquors collected in the country is over $63,000,000 per annum—an average to each person of over $1 50. In New Jersey the average is over $2. In Maine the average is three cents. That this difference is owing to the Maine law cannot be denied."

We suggest that whenever a large majority of the people of any State establish a liquor law, it shows that public sentiment demands it, and the law can be enforced.

ADJOURNED MEETING OF ORANGE PRESBYTERY.

At an adjourned meeting of Orange Presbytery held in Raleigh during the sessions of Synod (Nov. 10-13) the following business was transacted:

The overture to Synod adopted at the regular fall meeting, asking the Synod to divide the Presbytery was re-considered, and on motion, laid on the table indefinitely.

The pastoral relation between the Tarboro church and Rev. L. H. Baldwin was dissolved to take effect on 1st January.

Mr. Baldwin also asked leave to resign the pastoral charge of Rocky Mount church, whereupon said church was directed to appear by its commissioner at the next meeting of the Presbytery and show cause why the request of the pastor should not be granted.

Rev. Messrs Alexander and Jordan, and Geo. Allen, elder, were appointed a committee to report on the condition of the churches which were on our roll having no session, or having only a nominal existence, and to recommend the best method of dealing with them.

Rev. Messrs. Johnson and J. H. Smith, D. D., with Jesse H. Lindsay, elder, were appointed a committee to examine the Revised Directory of Worship sent down by the last General Assembly, and report to the spring meeting what action should be taken.

The following MEMORIAL OF REV. EDWARD HINES was adopted:

Rev. Edward Hines was born in Patrick county, Va., May, 6th, 1811, and died at the house of a friend in Granville county, N. C., Nov. 27th 1879, aged 68 years 6 months and 21 days. He was a pupil of the Caldwell Institute at Greensboro, N. C., and in 1841 he graduated from Union Theological Seminary, Prince Edward county, Va. He was soon after licensed by the Presbytery of Orange, and the Nutbush church in Granville county, appears to have received his first services while yet a licentiate.

On the 29th May, 1842 he was ordained by the same Presbytery to the full work of the ministry, and installed pastor of Shiloh church in the county of Granville. The pastorate thus formed continued for thirty-seven years, until May 11, 1879. The churches of Oak Hill, Oxford, Henderson, Grassy Creek, Shiloh and Nutbush, at various times received his ministrations as pastor and stated supply. The circumstances preceding his death are thus narrated by the Rev. D. E. Jordan. "He had been preaching for me several days at Silver Spring, an outpost of the Henderson church. He seemed to be in unusual good health and his preaching was evidently blessed. He seemed to speak as if he felt the nearness of the things which are unseen and eternal. On Wednesday night following, Nov. 19, 1879 he was attacked by an acute neuralgic disease in the chest. This continued with intervals of rest a little more than a week. On Thursday afternoon, Nov. 27th, at about 5 o'clock, he passed away. He was at times in great pain, but his joy in the blessed Saviour was full and overflowing. He seemed to labor for words to express the richness of his comfort and peace. He was buried at Shiloh church on Saturday the 29th, amid the tears of a large congregation of sorrowing friends and neighbors." Bro. Hines had ministered for nearly two generations—he had seen nearly every member of his flock gathered into the fold, and the love and tears of old and young to whom he had ministered in holy things attested his great acceptance among them, and his untiring fidelity to them. How many sweet and sacred memories of his own cheerful and happy fireside, and of the families of his charge, are awakened in the minds and hearts of his brethren who have visited him and labored with him at Shiloh, Nutbush, and elsewhere. A friend of Bro. Hines, personally intimate with him many years, thus writes of him in language so well expressed and so appropriate, that your committee transcribe it as part of this memorial notice—assured it will meet the hearty approval of every member of Orange Presbytery.

"What shall be said of one who fought so long his Master's battles, and bore so patiently that Master's burdens, except that he always wore in such manner as became the Christian warrior and servant, the honors of his Lord's service, and performed all that was commanded of him in humility, and in a reverent spirit? By his own well regulated and most cheerful fireside, by the beds of those languishing, or in mortal pain, in the Sunday school, prayer meeting, and church session, just as in the pulpit, he was frank, wise, loving, spiritual and abounding in kindly good will to men. Withal, he was earnestly devoted to their eternal salvation, which he urged upon them on all fitting occasions in fervid and saintly manner. Mr. Hines was free from cant as the pure air of the clear blue heavens. To his neighbors he was the kind, Christian pastor, and none was too obscure or abandoned to call forth his benevolence. All had full confidence in him, and some of his best friends to-day—those who will most sincerely mourn his death—are those of other communions with whom in the spirit of true Christian charity he often worshiped. No man could be more earnest in his desire to do good. Some have had their lips touched with live coals from the altar, and have entranced their hearers by splendid spells of eloquence, or have been learned in all the lore of the schools, and have taken of their grand stores of wisdom and imparted to the needs of their fellow men; but he with less oratory, and narrower learning has told the "Old, Old, Story" to thousands whose names are written in the Lamb's book of life. As a preacher, Mr. Hines was pointed, earnest, and practical, rather than ornate or discursive. On occasions his sermons were elaborated with great care, but he was always in earnest; usually, his style of speaking exhibited this characteristic in a most marked manner, and the tenderness and feeling exhibited so often was never regarded by his auditors as affected, or melo-dramatic, or mandlin. In the councils of the Church he will be sadly missed."

All who knew him and met him in Presbytery, or in Synod will feel that an active, laborious, and useful servant of God has finished his earthly work and the "ministry which he received of the Lord Jesus to testify the Gospel of the grace of God," and has gone to his glorious reward in those "Mansions in the Skies," of the anticipated delights of which, while here, he was so accustomed and so happy to sing and to speak.

The Presbytery of Orange tender to the family of our deceased brother their warmest sympathies in their great bereavement and loss.

STATE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

The annual session of the North Carolina Sunday School Association, was held in the Presbyterian Church at Salisbury, on the 26th ult. The following permanent officers were elected: President, Rev. J. Rumple; Vice Presidents, Rev. J. J. Renn, R. R. Crawford, J. A. Ramsay, of Salisbury, C. G. Yeates, of Greensboro, Rev. C. H. Wiley, Winston, and H. H. Gudger, Raleigh; Treasurer, Prof. N. F. Alderman, Greensboro. Statistical Secretary, E. A. Ebert, Salem. Corresponding Secretary, H. M. Jones, Salisbury.

Interesting reports were read from Cabarrus, Guilford, Forsyth, Orange and Rowan counties, and able and appropriate addresses on the origin and progress of Sabbath Schools, and the design of Sabbath School Associations and their work. Genl. R. D. Johnston and Mr. Wm. Murdock delivered centennary addresses, that is addresses referring to the Raike's centennary recently held in London.

The following were chosen as the Executive Committee for 1881: Rev. Jas. T. Lineback, chairman, Rev. T. H. Johnston, H. N. Snow, I. W. Durham and H. E. Fries.

The next meeting will be held in Salem or Winston.

HARMONY PRESBYTERY.

Held an adjourned meeting during the sessions of the Synod of South Carolina, Rev. W. T. Thompson was received from the Presbytery of Nashville, and Rev. Roderick Henderson from the Presbytery of Florida.

LETTER FROM DR. PLUMER.

The following letter will be read with interest and profit by many who loved and honored the distinguished author, especially those who have seasons of despondency and doubt:

COLUMBIA, S. C., April 5th, 1876.

MY DEAR MR. ——: Your favor of the 27th ult., reached me this morning. It awakens in me a lively concern for you. Without knowing more of your case and its history, I feel quite unable to form even a probable opinion of it. The following views seem to me safe.

1. You may think yourself unconverted. If this is so, you are indeed in great peril. To put off Christ with a mere profession without any heart is surely wicked. But if you have never truly and wholly given yourself to Christ, do it now. Make once for all a total surrender to His Sovereign, His all-subduing grace. Turn not away from the holy commandments; but steadfastly set your heart to seek the Lord.

2. Or, you may be in a backslidden state, though once truly converted. Get and read Andrew Fuller's "Backslider," or read in "Vital Godliness" the chapter on Backsliding. Be candid and true. If this is your case, read Ps. 32, and Ps. 51., and Ps. 130. O cry mightily to God for help. Take the Shorter Catechism, and read the answers to the question raised on each precept. What are the sins forbidden in this commandment? Judge honestly and truly in every case, but look steadfastly to Christ, always resolved to be upright and sincere.

3. Or, perhaps, you are simply and sadly tempted of the destroyer. He would, if he could, lead every one either to presumption or despair, to over-confidence or to despondency. I am very suspicious that this is the case with you. Yield not to temptation. Cry mightily to God. Be fully persuaded of the riches of grace in Christ. Whatever your case may be, resolve to hold fast the Redeemer. You must believe the promises of God. Let none of them slip. Be honest and hopeful. Blessed are they that hope in His mercy. Let me hear from you again. The Saviour is merciful. Faithfully yours.

SUGGESTED THOUGHTS IN CONNECTION WITH A MEETING OF SYNOD.

The Committee of Arrangements had much trouble in providing homes for the members of the Synod of South Carolina, growing out of the failure of some to send notice of their attendance. The most hospitable people do not take pleasure in preparing for guests that may not come. If every preacher or elder that expects to attend would early notify the committee when he would arrive in the place, and every one that expects to be prevented from attendance would likewise send notice of that fact, the comfort and pleasure of all parties would be much promoted. The writer has resolved that, when he gets old enough to act in church courts, he will promptly respond to the request of the Committee of Arrangements for notice of arrival; and thereby he will lighten the burden of this hard-worked committee and be more likely to secure a good place for himself.

It is attention to such little matters that is the kindness worthy of thinking beings. He is hardhearted that is not moved by the sight of need; but he only is truly kind that is on the watch to find occasion for kindness.

NOTES OF SYNOD OF MISSISSIPPI.

The Synod of Mississippi met in Meridian, Miss., Nov. 10, 1880. Dr. H. M. Smith, editor of the Southwestern Presbyterian, was elected moderator.

The question of the division of Synod was agitated sufficiently to ascertain that a large majority deem it inexpedient to take such a step at present. It seems to be the fashion with our Synods, both great and small, to talk about division. "Jeshurun waxed fat and kicked."

The report of the Committee on the Synodical Depository—the old bone of contention—was received and adopted without one dissenting voice. The war of fifteen or twenty years is ended at last. The battle has been fought, the victory won, and fraternal peace and harmony reign throughout our ecclesiastical borders. It is hard to determine which should be more admired, the Christian magnanimity of the conquerors or the graceful acquiescence of the conquered.

No subject that challenged the attention of this Synod called forth more earnest discussion than the Sabbath question. It came before the body in two different phases: First, is it right for a minister of the Gospel to travel on Sunday trains to and from his appointments; second, ought the Synod to request other Protestant religious bodies to unite with it in petitioning the Legislature of the State to prohibit the running of freight trains on Sunday? Both of these papers were referred to the able Committee on the Sabbath, of which Dr. Palmer is chairman. A full and elaborate report on the whole subject will doubtless be made at the next meeting of Synod in Vicksburg.

Dr. McIlwaine, in an earnest, instructive and thrilling address, stirred up the pure minds of the venerable body on the subject of missions, home and foreign.

Dr. Waddel delivered an impressive, common sense speech, in which he gave an interesting account of the internal workings, elements of prosperity and present wants of the Southwestern University at Clarksville, Tenn.

These able discourses of the corresponding brethren elicited from Synod resolutions strong and hearty, which will doubtless bring forth fruit as plentifully as any resolutions of the kind ever do.

After reading your article in the last issue of the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN on "Custom not Law," I have thought it might be interesting to your readers to know some of the customs as well as the questions among the Presbyterian bodies in this southwestern region. Your correspondent has been a member of the Presbytery of Mississippi and of the Synod of Mississippi nearly four years. Dr. Stratton of Natchez, when present, has invariably preached the sermon at 11 o'clock Sunday, no matter who might be moderator of Presbytery.

The recent meeting of Synod at Meridian is the first in the last four years where the Moderator of the body preached the "big sermon." Judging from the last four years, it is the custom for no member of the Presbytery within whose bounds Synod meets to preach during the sessions. It is not the custom of this Synod to select the Moderator from that Presbytery, within which the body convenes. It is not the custom of this Synod to rotate in order from one Presbytery to another. These is one custom of this Synod, however, which is perhaps more reprehensible than any of those belonging to the grand old Synod of North Carolina—it is the remarkable scarcity of devotional exercises—Synod is opened and closed with one short prayer at each time. No other praying, singing or preaching, except at divine worship each night during the sessions—till Sabbath. We, however, hope to see this defect remedied at the next meeting.

SYNOD OF GEORGIA.

[Condensed from the Christian Observer.]

During the late session of this Synod an overture from St. John Presbytery was presented asking that the General Assembly cut off from the Synod the Presbyteries of St. John, Savannah and Florida, and with them constitute the Synod of Florida. With this overture the Presbytery of Florida concurred but the Presbytery of Savannah did not. The Committee of Bills and Overtures reported, simply recommending that parties be heard for and against. An amendment to the overture was immediately proposed: that Macon be added to the Presbyteries named, and that the new Synod be called South Georgia and Florida, and a second amendment proposed that the Synod should contain parts only of Macon and Savannah. The matter of boundaries was referred to a committee who reported advising the construction of the Presbytery of Thomasville from the southern portions of Macon and Savannah Presbyteries. On this report there was an exciting debate, it being held that it was premature and that such action without previous deliberation, or even knowledge, was arbitrary. A substitute to the effect that the new Presbytery should be formed from Savannah Presbytery alone was finally carried. This action was reconsidered at a subsequent sitting, and as a substitute for the motion creating the Presbytery of Thomasville the original overture from St. John Presbytery was adopted, viz: that the Assembly create the Synod of Florida with the Presbyteries of Savannah, Florida and St. John. Savannah, it is said, will protest.

Another matter of some interest was a judicial case from Atlanta Presbytery by appeal of Mr. W. S. Turner. Central church, Atlanta, arraigned and tried Mr. Turner upon charges of impropriety in his business dealings. The charges as presented were not sustained, the vote of the session being a tie, and the moderator declining to vote. The session then adopted a minute which expressed the opinion that while the specific charges had not been proved the conduct of Mr. Turner in his business transactions was such as to bring discredit upon himself and religion.

Mr. Turner, a few days thereafter, asked for dismission to a Methodist church in Atlanta and it was refused upon the ground that he was under judicial censure, and consequently could not be dismissed as a member in good standing.

The Presbytery of Atlanta, on complaint of Mr. Turner, decided that he was under judicial censure, but that it was not of a nature to debar him from a letter of dismission if applied for in reasonable time and provided the admonition is in a proper spirit.

Mr. Turner appealed from the decision to the Synod of Georgia on the ground that in failing to reverse the refusal of the session to grant him a letter of dismission the Presbytery of Atlanta had done him injustice. The Synod, by a vote of twenty-five to fifteen, refused to sustain. Mr. Turner, who had appeared in his own behalf, gave notice of appeal to the General Assembly.

THE SYNOD OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

This Synod held its meeting, beginning on the 17th and concluding on the 20th November, in the town of Sumter. Fifty-seven ministers and forty-six elders, one hundred and three in all, were present during the sessions. Rev. J. L. Martin was moderator and Rev. E. G. Smith assistant clerk. The meeting was an unusually interesting and pleasant one, and will no doubt be long remembered and cherished for the pleasure enjoyed and the good accomplished.

A new feature was introduced at this meeting in the shape, of a Conference upon the Work of the Presbyteries, the morning of the second day. And the experiment proved so interesting and profitable that the Synod made this a standing order for its future meetings.

Rev. Dr. Girardeau, as chairman of a committee appointed three years ago, presented a third and final report on "The Nature and Functions of the Diaconate," which the Synod requests the editors of the Southern Presbyterian Review to publish, as they have done with the previous reports, in that journal, and directs the stated clerk then to endeavor to have the whole published in book form.

The interests of Davidson College, of Education, Publication and Foreign Missions, were all presented and considered, and appropriate action taken upon them. Rev. Dr. Hepburn was present from Davidson, Rev. Prof. Riley from Adger and Rev. Drs. Hazen and Wilson, respectively Secretaries of Publication and Foreign Missions. A whole evening was devoted to the consideration of Foreign Missions, and a stirring meeting it was.

Columbia Theological Seminary, the fondly cherished child of the old Synod and the Almer Mater of nearly all her ministers, of course was prominently brought forward and most earnestly considered. It is proper to say too that great harmony and good feeling prevailed in regard to the matter, despite the wide difference of opinion and feeling which has existed in many quarters of late. The statements made as to the success of the efforts to raise the Home Memorial endowment of $30,000 were very encouraging; indeed surprisingly so. This Synod, therefore, resolved to endeavor to raise within its own bounds $20,000 of this amount, hoping that Alabama will add the remaining $10,000, and thus leave Georgia to raise $15,000, which she has undertaken to do in order to restore the full endowment to the Georgia chair in the Seminary. The Synod was almost unanimous in expressing its desire for the return of the institution to the control of these three Synods, which formerly owned it, and appointed a commission to act with similar bodies from the other two Synods in affecting the transfer when the Assembly orders it.

The next meeting of the Synod was appointed for Columbia, that it may take part as a body in the proposed celebration of the semi-centennial of Dr. Howe's connection with the Seminary. This is appointed for the first week in November next, when a great gathering of the friends and former students of the institution and a grand celebration are expected.

MEETINGS OF PRESBYTERIES.

Ebenezer. In session at Mayslick, Ky., Nov. 13th. Received Rev. T. D. Latimer from the Presbytery of Eastern Texas and installed him pastor of Mayslick church. Dismissed Rev. W. G. Keady to the Presbytery of Memphis, and Rev. W. L. Bayley to the Presbytery of Greenbrier, and placed a call in the hands of Rev. Henry M. Soudder from the church at Carlisle for one half his time.

Dallas. Met Nov. 11th, at Milford, Texas. Elected Rev. W. S. Johnson Moderator. Received Rev. J. G. Fackler from the Presbytery of Lafayette and Rev. G. P. Richardson from the Presbytery of Central Texas. Rev. S. M. Lockett was dismissed to join the Presbytery of Central Texas. Rev. W. W. Brimm was installed evangelist of the Presbytery. The following overture to Synod was adopted: In view of the fact that the Synod of Texas (North), at a recent meeting in Weatherford, Texas, appointed a committee of three ministers and two elders to confer with a similar committee to be appointed by our Synod, therefore this Presbytery respectfully overtures the Synod of Texas to appoint this committee in order to devise, if possible, some plan by which we can more effectually promote the cause of Presbyterianism in Texas.

Five ministers present from other Presbyteries desired to labor in the bounds of Dallas Presbytery if the way be clear.

Lexington. Called meeting at Staunton, Va., on 23d ulto. Consent was given to Rev. A. S. Moffett to accept the call to Ronnd Hill church in Winchester Presbytery. Consent was withheld, from Rev. T. M. Boyd to accepting a call to Enfaula church in East Alabama Presbytery. This action in deference to protest of Mt. Horeb congregation of which Mr. Boyd is pastor.

PRACTICAL WORKING OF THE TITHE.

In reply to your note of inquiry as to the "practical working" of the tithe system in our church here, I give you the following facts:

Two years ago I took charge of this church. The first year I was stated supply, on a definite salary. Then I was called as pastor. In the call, which was put in my hands by Louisville Presbytery, no definite sum was named for my support, but some of the leading members of the church agreed to pay tithes. These tithes were for "ministerial support" (that is, the support of the pastor), home and foreign missions, disabled ministers, &c. Two officers of the church, an elder and a deacon, were appointed to receive the tithes, which could be paid either in money or in kind, at the discretion of the person who tithed.

The two simple principles which governed the tithing were these: 1. It was to be a tithe of all that the man received in any way during the year. "Of all that Thou shalt give me, I will surely give the tenth unto Thee." (Gen. xxviii: 22.) 2. The tithe was to be paid promptly, as soon as the man received. "If the first fruit be holy, the lump is also holy." (Rom. xi: 16.) Every month the elders and deacons held a joint meeting, at which the tithes were distributed—so much to the pastor, so much to foreign missionaries, etc. Besides this, at our Sabbath morning services we took up collections, in which the pastor and people made free-will offerings to God, to provide fuel, lights, &c., for His house, to support mission schools, build churches, defray expenses of missionary travel, &c. On this plan we worked through the year, at the end of which time the results were found to be these:

1. The pastor's income had increased 33 per cent. over that of the year before. The contributions to home and foreign missions, and other general objects, had increased — per cent.

2. The pastor had not once had occasion to go to the church officers to suggest that he was in need of money. His supplies of money and provisions had come in regularly, month by month. He received just as the church members received. Of course there was no such thing as the salary being in arrears. There was no salary.

3. As it was left to the tithe payers to bring forward their own tithes, the deacons were relieved of the disagreeable task of going round to dun these people for their "subscriptions." A vast amount of friction was thus removed.

4. Some of the tithe payers had only entered on this plan as an experiment for a year. They doubted its success. They said that it had been hard enough to raise the salary when the deacons dunned the people. If the dunning was omitted, what would the pastor's support be? But at the end of the year, those who had only consented to try the experiment for a year, were so well satisfied with the good results that they resolved to hold a congregational meeting and urge the adoption of the tithing on the whole congregation: and could you have been present at this meeting, and heard the expressions of relief and pleasure from the deacons and the pastor, and the general declaration of those who had tithed of the blessing of God on the tithing, you could not have doubted, I think, that the system of ministerial support, which is the only one ever devised by God, is admirably adapted to the church of this day.

I may add that at the meeting of the Synod of Kentucky last month a paper was submitted by a committee, of which Dr. John W. Pratt was chairman, in which it was declared incidentally that the tithe law had never been abrogated. The paper was in reply to an address made by Dr. McIlwaine. It was moved to strike out the clause relating to the tithe. When the vote was taken the moderator decided that it was not to strike out. A division was called for, but before the division was made a member stated that his opinion had not yet been formed on the tithe question, and inquired whether a vote to strike out would be regarded as a denial of the obligation of the tithe. The moderator informed him that it would not. Upon this the division was made, and 32 voted for striking out and 24 against. This occurred at the heel of the session, when a number of members had left. I was told by an experienced member of the Synod that had the vote been taken at a fuller session the tithe clause would have been retained. As it was, the vote showed that a considerable part of the Synod already endorsed the tithe plan.

Dr. Pratt declared to the Synod his conviction that twenty years hence the tithe system would be generally accepted in the Church.

COLLECTION FOR THE COLORED INSTITUTE

The ministers and sessions are reminded that the first Sabbath of December is the day appointed by the General Assembly for collections for the support for the Institute for Training Colored Ministers. This Institute is growing slowly, but steadily in numbers and in usefulness. There are now thirteen students in regular attendance with the near prospect of five or six more connected with our Church.

We have very much to encourage us in our work in the diligence and good deportment of the students and their progress in study. We feel no hesitation in asking for the liberal support of our churches.

Collections should be sent to Dr. J. T. Searcy, treasurer, Tuskaloosa, Ala.

Items from Central Presbyterian:

Rev. C. R. Vaughn, D. D., has signified to New Providence church his willingness to accept the call tendered him, on condition that he can remain as chaplain at the University of Virginia until the close of the present session. The congregation has agreed to this arrangement, and has invited Rev. W. W. Houston to supply the church in the meanwhile. Communion services were conducted in the church on Sabbath, 14th inst., by Rev. W. E. Baker, who also preached on Friday and Saturday before. Three persons were received on profession of faith.

Rev. W. C. Campbell was installed as pastor of the church at Harper's Ferry on Sunday, the 21st. Rev. Dr. H. M. White, Rev. A. C. Hopkins and Rev. J. A. Armstrong were appointed to conduct the services.

Rev. James A. McKee has accepted an invitation to supply the Presbyterian church at Bainbridge, Georgia.

Items from the Christian Observer:

A correspondent writes of the labors of Rev. N. Bachman in Chattooga county, Ga: "The meetings were held at four churches in the bounds of Rev. Messrs. Milner and Crawford's charges, Cherokee Presbytery. The labors were commenced September 17th and continued until November 7th, with several intervals of rest for a few days. The result of these meetings is an addition to our churches of nearly forty members, and a considerable number that will be added to the Methodist and Baptist churches.

Rev. E. H. Briggs has changed his postoffice address from Palatka, Fla., to Columbus, Ga.

A correspondent writes: "We have just returned from a delightful meeting at Centreville, Ky., which lasted six days, embracing the fifth Sabbath of October. They have had a small organization, with a good house of worship, for many years. Rev. H. A. Smith has been their stated supply for twenty years. They have had many difficulties to contend with, but the most prominent one at this time is 'the vice of the age, intemperance.' This ruinous habit has brought bloodshed and sorrow upon some families. They have saloons enough in the place to ruin the rising generation. The congregations were good from the first, for so small a community. Five or six young persons were added to the church upon profession of faith, and most of them were baptized. Among them were two little girls, who gave as clear and satisfactory evidence of the work of grace as children could be expected to give. 'Out of the months of babes and sucklings Thou hast perfected praise.' The Christians were refreshed and encouraged, and we trust impressions were made on some minds which shall last forever."

At a congregational meeting held in the Presbyterian church at Milford, Texas, November 14th, Rev. Hillary Moseley was unanimously elected pastor.

Rev. W. George has signified his acceptance of the call of the church at Fort Worth, Texas. He has labored with great acceptability in his Kentucky charge, and will be spared with regret. He requests his correspondents to address him hereafter at Fort Worth, Texas.

A protracted meeting was held at Bowling Green, Ky., during last week by Rev. J. L. Caldwell, assisted by Rev. J. F. Hendy of Owensboro. A marked interest in personal religion had been awakened by the meeting of the Kentucky State Convention of the Young Men's Christian Association. When the convention closed there were perhaps twenty persons asking for the prayers of God's people.

Rev. W. E. Cave writes to us of a precious meeting in his church, at Big Spring and Bloomfield, which has just closed. "For some time our people have felt the need of a revival, and I felt it as deeply as they did. On last Sunday, a week ago, I gave notice that Rev. J. H. Morrison had kindly consented to preach for us a week, and that services would begin on the following Monday. I requested that there be a general turn-out of the people to the house of God; that all believers should besiege the throne of grace in prayer, and that there and then each one resolve to speak at his earliest opportunity on the subject of religion to his friends and acquaintances. Rev. Mr. Morrison came on Tuesday, the 9th inst., and preached morning and night for eight days. His presentations of the truth were characterized by unusual power and simplicity. It was evident from the very beginning that the Lord was with us. We had good congregations, and such fixed and serious attention as I never before saw. The interest increased daily, and it can be truly said that souls were added each day to the church. The result is, that our people have been greatly revived and refreshed, and sixteen persons have joined our church on profession of their faith in Jesus Christ. My hope in the permanency of the work is strengthened by the fact that the majority of the converts are children of the covenant. It is the fruit of sound Christian training in the family."

The church at Carlisle, Ky., recently enjoyed a meeting of unusual interest. The pastor was assisted by Rev. W. T. McElroy, who preached the gospel with great simplicity. God's people were very much strengthened, and there were fourteen added to the membership of the church by certificate and profession together.

On last Sunday, 21st ult., at Tinkling church, Rev. Dr. G. B. Strickler asked the congregation to remain after the services were over. He then informed them that he had received a call to the pulpit formerly filled by Rev. Stuart Robertson at Louisville, Ky. He said that he was advising with his friends as to accepting the call and would make a visit to Louisville in a few days. Dr. S. left for his visit to Louisville on Wednesday last.—Staunton, Va., Vindecator.

PRESBYTERIAN (NORTH).

In the Synod of Texas (Northern) ten new Presbyterian churches have been built during the last three years and three more are building.

Rev. Dr. Hitchcock has been chosen to succeed Rev. Dr. Adams, as Pesident of Union Theological Seminary in New York.

At the Presbytery of Idaho there were fifteen civilized Indians, all church members and one was an ordained minister, four ruling elders, two licentiates and three applying for licensure.

METHODIST.

The Christian Advocate says of the missionary work of the Methodist Church: "A stern fact is that the missionary year begins with a debt of $112,150. Another fact is that the debt is $49,113 55 more than it was at the same time last year. After the most careful scrutiny it was found that the smallest sum total with which the committee could hope to carry on the work effectively next year is $778,034, of which $112,150 is to extinguish the debt."

Among the membership of the First Methodist church of Atlanta, Ga., are the following: The Governor of the State, the Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court, United States Senator, Representative to Congress, Secretary of State, Comptroller-General, Solicitor-General, and two members of the State Legislature, besides minor officials. That pastor must have his hands full.

BAPTIST,

The Hon. Isaac Davis of Worcester, Mass., has recently given $5,000 to the American Baptist Missionary Union, and the same amount to the Southern Baptist Convention, the money to be invested by its Board, and the income to be invested annually in the prosecution of foreign missions.—Herald and Presbyter.

The Massachusetts Baptist Convention recently passed the following resolution:

"Resolved, That in view of the widespread evils of intemperance, and realizing its desolating influence over the homes of its victims, and its destructive power over the souls and bodies of our fellow-men, this convention of workers together with Christ for the destruction of the works of the devil is constrained to place itself in unqualified opposition to the license system, or any and every other system that will encourage the manufacture, sale and use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage."

Arousing its Readers.

An alarm of fire at midnight is a startling thing, but not half so startling to many who hear it as would be the sudden knowledge of their own dangerous physical condition. Thousands of thousands are hurrying to their graves because they are carelessly indifferent to the insidious inroads of disease and the means of cure. It is the mission of H. H. Warner & Co., with their Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, to arouse men to a sense of their danger and then cure them.—Memphis Appeal.

SECULAR MISCELLANY.

A locomotive to draw a train eighty miles an hour is now being constructed in Philadelphia, and a miniature machine has been exhibited which drives a sewing machine by electricity.

Lenoir Topic; Diphtheria is raging in Watauga county, there have been six deaths recently. Four in the family of Mr. James Robinson in one week. Two girls nearly grown were buried in one coffin. The last and youngest that died was a little girl.

Spots on the son are sometimes freckles, and sometimes photographs of a mother's loving but weighty hand.

The Russian papers announce the death of Oleg Gorobetz, one of the wandering minstrels who used to roam over Russia singing the old popular traditions. Oleg, who was nearly 100 years of age, had a marvellous memory and could sing all the national songs.

It is a noteworthy fact that the two most prominent English Generals of the day are enemies of all kinds of intoxicating liquors. Sir Garnet Wolseley is said to be a rigid teetotaler, and Sir Frederick Roberts, who cut the Afghan knot, is a staunch Good Templar.

Two Spaniards have lately taken out a patent in Spain for making writing paper incombustible. The experiments are said to have been satisfactory. The paper will not burn, no matter what may be the intensity of the heat applied. A single sheet submitted to the direct action of the flame will carbonize but does not take fire. If a roll of prepared paper is placed in the hottest fire the outside leaves will carbonize and the edges for a short depth but the interior remains unaltered, the writing or printing being perfectly legible. The cheapness of the preparation makes it accessible to every purpose in which paper is used.

Expect nothing from him who promises a great deal.

One night the Missouri river cut off thirty acres from a man's farm. One spring it cut off ten thousand acres from Dakotah and gave them to Nebraska. And just above the city of Omaha, in 1876, it took more than a square mile from Nebraska and gave it to Iowa.

The daily experience of every one is that neglect of the bowels is the prime cause of ill health. It is so easy to become irregular and so difficult to restore the system to its natural health that many despair and doubt every remedy.

But when right at hand is to be found Simmons Liver Regulator, there is no excuse longer to delay; it acts so naturally that the system hardly seems under the influence of medicine, and after a while all remedies can be dispensed with, for this medicine establishes the health and permanently creates regularity of the bowels.

"I have never seen or tried such a simple, efficacious, or satisfactory and pleasant remedy in my life as Simmons Liver Regulator.

A fair trial only is needed to convince the most skeptical that Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer will accomplish all that is claimed for it.

MARRIED.

No notice of a marriage or death will be inserted unless accompanied by a responsible name, which is wanted not for publication but as a guaranty of good faith.

In Lincolnton, N. C., Nov. 11th, 1880, by Rev. R. Z. Johnston, Mr. J. M. HANNA, of Gastonia, N. C., and Miss ROSA TUCKER.

At Bethel church, near Denver, Lincoln county, N. C., Nov. 24th, 1880, by Rev. R. Z. Johnston, Mr. FRANK T. SMITH and Miss ZETTA MUNDY, daughter of W. W. Mundy, Esq.

At the Presbyterian church in Cheraw, S. C., on the evening of October 13th, 1880 by the Rev. E. H. Buist, Mr. W. C. VEREEN and Miss MARY McNEILL.

DIED.

Obituary notices must be paid for in advance. The first ten lines are inserted free. The excess over ten lines is charged for at the rate of ten cents per line. Correspondents can ascertain what an obituary will cost by counting eight words to a line, and multiplying each line by ten cents.

At her home in Laurinburgh, N. C., on Sunday, Nov. 28th, at 9½ p. m., Mrs. MARY DICKSON, wife of Dr. Robert D. Dickson, in the 56th year of her age.

In Tarboro, N. C., on Monday, 8th Nov., 1880, Mrs. WILLIAM MARTHA JARVIS, in the 61st year of her age.

Mrs. Jarvis' summons came unexpectedly, at least to her family and friends, while she was visiting her married daughter, but it found her prepared by a godly life of humble trust and consistent piety to meet the Bridegroom.

Her remains were carried to Washington, her home, and a large assembly of mourning friends testified by their presence at the funeral to the position she held in their love and esteem.

At Topsail Sound, Nov. 18th, Mr. THOMAS HANSLEY, aged 72

A good neighbor and a good citizen has departed. He leaves a widow and a number of friends to lament their loss.

In Hartsville, S. C., Nov. 16, 1880, Mrs. IDA HERRING, beloved daughter of Wm. and S. M. Huggins and most affectionate and devoted wife of J. Pearsall Herring.

So sudden and unexpected was the shock that it could hardly be realized. A consistent member of the Baptist Church, she was a hard worker in the service of Christ for ten years, though only 21 years of age at her death. None knew her but to love her, and though 'twas a struggle to give her up, God saw fit to call her home: and she now smiles in heaven.

In Pender county, N. C., on 19th October last, DAWSON T. DURHAM.

For a number of years the deceased was a prominent citizen of the county: an active, useful, devoted, energetic man of business, a devoted husband and affectionate father. In the ordinary walks of life showing himself to be a modest, unassuming Christian gentleman, discharging the duties of an official member of his church (the Methodist Episcopal of which he was long a member), with great fidelity and acceptableness. The doctrines of his Church he held with great firmness, yet with true Christian charity to all of God's people of every name. He died in the full assurance of faith and a well grounded hope of receiving the welcome plaudit of "Well done, good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful in a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things."

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

Mrs. MARGARET JANE McDUFFIE, daughter of Malcom and Nancy McDonald, was born in Cumberland county, N. C, Feb. 1st, 1851, and was dedicated to God in baptism in infancy. In early girlhood she joined McPherson church under the ministry of the writer. It was his privilege also to unite her in marriage to Mr. Willie R. McDuffie, Nov. 30th, 1871. In this endearing relation they walked the path to heaven, until Nov. 21st, 1880, when it pleased the great and good Shepherd to take her from the bosom of a loving husband and four dear little children, to the mansion provided for her in glory and for which she testified she was "ready." The last word she uttered was "glory."

She was gentle, pure, and a devoted follower of the meek and lowly Jesus. This was in some respects a sad affliction. Our departed sister, her husband, and a bright, sweet little daughter were all down with typhoid fever at Keyser, on the railroad, their present residence. But we do hope and pray the bereaved husband and dear little Mary Ann (now motherless) may be spared and raised up again to health.

THE FINER DRAWING ROOM STYLES.

MASON & HAMLIN CABINET ORGANS.

Comparatively few musicians, even, have kept pace with recent improvements in reed instruments and are fully aware of the excellence now attained in the finer styles, in the manufacture of which the Mason & Hamlin Organ Co. are quite unrivaled. These styles must not be judged by the small organ so largely sold; which they greatly excel. It is principally these finer styles which have won for the Mason & Hamlin Organs the extraordinary distinctions awarded them at EVERY GREAT WORLD'S INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION AND COMPARISON OF THE BEST PRODUCTIONS OF ALL NATIONS FOR THIRTEEN YEARS; being the only highest awards to any American organs at any one. It is one of these which led Dr. FRANZ LISZT to characterize the Mason & Hamlin Organs not only as "matchless," but as "unrivaled," and which led the distinguished OTTO XAEWENKA, of Berlin, to declare them "the most excellent of instruments," adding: "They are capable of giving the finest tone coloring, and no other instrument so enraptures the player." THEODORE THOMAS testifies that musicians generally rank these organs very high, far above all others, in which opinion he himself fully concurs. OLE BULL found them so superior as to draw from him the declaration that "Their fine quality of tone is in contrast with that of other reed organs." The distinguished tenor, ITALO CAMPANINI, in a note to the manufacturers, as he was about leaving this country recently, wrote: "Having had opportunity to observe and use your organs, while singing in your country, I take pleasure in testifying to their admirable qualities. They excel all similar instruments of which I have any knowledge. But you have better proof of my opinion of them than even this expression, in the fact that I have just purchased one to take with me to Italy." Hundreds of similar opinions from distinguished musicians have accumulated in the hands of the manufacturers.

A recent beautiful invention which the Mason & Hamlin Co. are now introducing, greatly improves the key action of such instruments, lightening the touch, heretofore difficult when many stops were used, one-half, and still more improving it in other respects.

THE FINER DRAWING ROOM STYLES of the Mason & Hamlin Organs are furnished in cases of BLACK WALNUT, MAHOGANY, ASH and EBONIZED, plain to very elegant, some with pipe organ tops. They have from THIRTEEN to TWENTY-THREE STOPS; some with TWO MANUALS and FULL PEDAL BASE. NET PRICES are from $200 to $900.

FOR THE FAMILY.

A Turned-Down Page.

There's a turned-down page, as some writer says,
In every human life—
A hidden story of happier days,
Of peace amid the strife.

A folded leaf that the world knows not—
A love-dream rudely crushed;
The sight of a foe that is not forgot,
Although the voice be hushed.

The far-distant sounds of a harp's soft strings,
An echo on the air;
The hidden page may be full of such things;
Of the things that once were fair.

There is a hidden page in life, and mine
A story might unfold;
But the end was sad of the dream divine—
It better rests untold. —Selected.

Be Thoughtful of the Poor.

"Ellie, I want you to go this afternoon to Mrs. Townsend with the money for the work she brought home while we were out."

"This afternoon, mother? It is very warm for that long walk."

"Yes, dear, I know; but if you were going blackberrying or boating, I am sure you would not mind, and this is more important."

Ellie could not see how it was more important, but she did not like to argue with her mother; so she was silent. Her mother saw her unwilling looks, however, and thought it best to explain.

"Ellie," she said, "I have a short story to tell you which will show you why I think it so important for you to go this afternoon. Shall I tell you?"

Ellie was all eagerness to hear, and her mother began:

"It was when I was quite a young girl that my aunt gave me material for a nice white dress, and the money to pay for having it prettily made. Usually made my summer dresses myself, but my aunt told me of a young girl who supported herself by sewing, and to whom she wished me to take the work. I went accordingly, and in a short time the dress came home. I was out when it came, but the message came with the bill asking if I would pay it immediately. I meant to take the money that very day to the dressmaker, but company coming, I did not get out. I could have sent the money, but I thought I would take it myself the next day.

"On the day following I was unexpectedly invited on an excursion, and when I came home I found a letter asking me to set out the next day for the country, where I was to spend a week with a friend. In the hurry and bustle of packing I forgot the money for my dress, and did not remember it until I had reached the end of my journey. I had not the dressmaker's address with me, so I thought I must wait until my return home. I did not know that a very second message had come on the very day I left home.

"I had a pleasant visit, stayed a little longer than I had meant, and came home meaning to see Grace Dowey at an early day and explain why I had not paid her at once.

"On the way from the cars I passed the house and saw a little group of neighbors gathered about it.

"'What is the matter?' I asked of a woman near the door.

"'Matter enough!' she said. 'The poor girl can't pay her rent, though she works as hard as any one could; but folks won't pay their bills, and she's been sold out.'

"'Sold out!' I cried in horror; I didn't know they did such things except in books.'

"'Very like you didn't,' said the woman, 'but there's many as had reason to know when they can't pay their rent.'

"'Where is Grace?' I cried; 'where can I see her?'

"'She's sick in bed,' said another woman. 'I took her old mother into my house, and Grace has gone to a neighbor's across the street; she's most broken-hearted.'

"'Take me to see her, please!' I pleaded.

"The woman, seeing my anxiety, led me at once to Grace, who lay almost as if dead. She seemed to have cried until she could cry no more. 'O Grace, forgive me!' I cried. 'Here's your money—six dollars—and I am sure mamma and Aunt Fanny will send you the rest. How much much is it all?'

"'Twenty dollars, miss,' answered Grace; but your aunt is out of town, and I would not ask any one else. If I only had the money owed to me I could pay it.'

"Tell me who owes it Grace,' I said, and I will get it for you; only these men must go away.'

"'I'll manage that for you,' said the woman who had brought me over. 'If the young lady will promise the money, we will have it all right in ten minutes; but you mustn't stir from here to-night, Grace. She's clean worn out with worrying, miss.'

"O, Grace, I shall never forgive myself for my share of your trouble,' I said but she only pressed my hand and smiled on me gratefully.

"Then I hurried off. Two of Grace's creditors were my own friends, and from them I knew the money could soon be produced. To my mother I must go for the few dollars remaining. I did not wish to see my aunt, and Grace had said she was out of town. I found her when I entered the house, however, and in my penitence I told her the whole tale. She saw that I was punished already for my carelessness, so she said no more; but I never forgot her look of reproach. That night she called me to her room, and asked me to read a verse in the Bible. Here it is—Duet. xxiv. 14, 15:—'Thou shalt not oppress an hired servant that is poor and needy, * * * at his day shalt thou give him his hire; neither shall the sun go down upon it, for he is poor, and setteth his heart upon it; lest he cry against thee unto the Lord, and it be sin unto thee.'

"From that day I have never failed to pay immediately all debts of this kind. Sometimes it has caused me a little inconvenience, but the memory of Grace Dewey and the suffering which I in part had caused would not let me rest. Therefore, my child, I ask you to go this afternoon, notwithstanding the heat. Mrs. Townsend may not suffer if her money should be delayed, but we cannot tell, and the Scripture rule is the one which we should always obey.—S. S. Visitor.

After Many Days.

An English Christian writes of a remarkable circumstance that lately came under his observation. Coming from a religious meeting some time ago, one of our nobility stepped into a private circle of friends, one of whom said to him:

"Your lordship promised you would tell us about your son who died in Africa."

His lordship narrated the following incident:

"Our boy was the darling of his mother, and his father's favorite child. We could not but love him. But he left us, and went to South Africa. When he left us he was unconverted, and this was our chief sorrow. He had not been long in Africa when we received a letter to the following effect:

"'My Dear Father: You will be sorry to hear that I have met with an accident. I am unable to write much. The doctor hopes that in a day or two I shall be better. I will let you know in a day or two, if I am able.'"

"O," said he, "if there had only been in it one such expression as 'by God's providence,' or 'if the Lord will.'"

But there was no recognition of God; and the father grieved lest his son should die in the unconverted state in which he left home.

Time rolled on and another letter came. The postmark was the same, but the handwriting was different. It turned out to be written by by the physician. The substance of the letter was as follows:

"Your lordship will be grieved to hear that your son died by the accident to which he referred in his last letter. He lingered but a few days. He suffered greatly."

Said the nobleman: "When I read that letter I took it away with me and laid it down before the Lord and said: 'O, Absalom, my son, my son! would God that I had died for thee, my son, my son!' I dared not hand the letter to his mother. Broken-hearted, I took it to God, and afterward told it to his mother. But there was not a word of God, or Providence, in the letter, and it was bringing my gray hairs with sorrow to the grave; I felt as if I should never lift up my head again.

"A few weeks again elapsed, when a third letter was brought. It was substantially this:

"'Your lordship will grieve to learn of the death of your son. The moment I heard of his illness I resorted to his bedside, where I found him in the deepest anxiety about his soul. He was laboring under a sense of guilt—a deep load of sin. I pointed him to the dying Lamb; told him of the one Sacrifice—the one Saviour; and your lordship will be delighted to know that on the day before his departure, light broke in upon his mind, and he died rejoicing in sin forgiven. His last words were these: 'Tell my father that I die in Jesus, and that I shall meet him in heaven.'"

His lordship, after telling this affecting story, wiped the tears from his aged and noble face, and turning around to his auditory in that private circle, said:

"Can I ever doubt my God again? Can I doubt his promises? I have always believed, the Saviour's promise, 'If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it;' and 'Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."—Christian Woman.

The Regalia of Scotland.

The regalia of Scotland has experienced many strange adventures. For a long time the jewels were supposed to have been either lost or stolen, but Sir Walter Scott, while indulging in his propensity for antiquarian research, came across some old documents which led him to believe that the regalia was somewhere hidden within the precincts of Edinburgh Castle. A royal license was procured from George IV., a commission appointed, and a general search instituted. Scott, observing that the wall where the present crown-room is was of unduo thickness, came to the conclusion that there was a secret chamber within the masonry. Tools were brought, and after some labor in removing the stones, a vaulted room was disclosed. An entrance being effected and the rubbish being removed, they found in one corner of the apartment a large chest bound round with iron and secured by three heavy padlocks. This being speedily broken open, there before their eyes lay the old insignias of Scottish royalty, looking as fresh and beautiful as they did in the days of "James Fitz-James." In the meantime the news spread that the search for the regalia was being made, and all Edinburgh poured forth her hundreds and thousands. They filled the esplanade and occupied every available portion of ground from which the slightest view of the castle could be obtained. The result of the search was awaited with national anxiety. At last, when the assembled crowd had about given up all hope, a cannon fired from the castle and a flag run hastily up on the highest tower proclaimed to the assembled thousands that the regalia was again restored to Scotland.—Christian Intelligencer.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Sketches of Famous Persons.

LOUIS MELIKOFF.

Gen. Louis Melikoff, the new Russian military dictator, is a handsome soldier, with black curly hair, large, dark, sparkling eyes, and features which, without being quite regular, are comely and refined. He is of middle stature, of slight, nervous structure and spare person. He is a man of great varied accomplishments. He is an Armenian by birth.

WYCLIFFE.

One loves to picture this remarkable man pursuing his biblical toils, now at his Lutterworth Rectory, then in his college at Oxford, working in the winter nights by his lamp, and early in the summer's morn as the sun beamed through his window. We see him with his long gray beard, sometimes alone, bending over the parchment manuscript, carefully writing down some well-labored rendering; and sometimes in company with others who sympathized in his sentiments and loved to aid him in his hallowed enterprise.

EMILE AUGIER.

Though finely molded, the head of Emile Augier is that of a witty, good-natured bourgeois. He was born in 1820, but looks as though he were not yet fifty. His hair, and his full curly beard, at which his left hand is ever tugging, were, when I last saw him, still black. His forehead is broad and intellectual. His whole counteuance bespeaks physical as well as moral strength. The dominating feature is the nose, which is of the most pronounced Roman type, and which apparently lessens the size of its neighbors, a pair of small piercing black eyes, shining with Rabelaisian humor. Far from betraying the favored child of fame, his manners are still those of the clerk of Monsieur Mason, the celebrated lawyer, in whose office he passed his early youth, before his poetic and dramatic talent had pointed out to him where his destiny lay.—French Men of Letters.

MACAULAY.

The closing days of '59 were made memorable by the death of Macaulay. He had been raised to the peerage, and had had some hopes of being able to take occasional part in the stately debates of the House of Lords. But his health almost suddenly broke down, and his voice was never heard in the Upper Chamber. He died prematurely, having only entered his 60th year. Macaulay had had, as he often said himself, a singularly happy life, although it was not without its severe losses and its griefs. His career was one of uninterrupted success. His books brought him fame, influence, social position, and wealth all at once. He never made a failure. The world only applauded one book more than the other—the second speech more than the first. Macaulay, the essayist; Macaulay, the historian; Macaulay, the ballad writer; Macaulay, the Parliamentary orator; Macaulay, the brilliant, inexhaustible talker—he was alike, it might appear, in everything he chose to attempt. After his death there came a natural reaction; and the reaction, as is always the case, was inclined to go too far.

People began to find out that Macaulay had done too many things; that he did not do anything as it might have been done; that he was too brilliant; that he was not only brilliant; that he was not really brilliant at all, but only superficial and strong. The disparagement was more unjust by far than even the extravagant estimate. Macaulay was not the paragon, the uiuth wonder of the world, for which people once set him down; but he was undoubtedly a great literary man. He was also a man of singularly noble character. He was, in a literary sense, egotistic—that is to say, he thought, and talked, and wrote a good deal about his works and himself; but he was one of the most unselfish men that ever lived. He appears to have enjoyed advancement, success, and money, only because these enabled him to give pleasure and support to the members of his family. He was attached to his family, especially to his sisters, with the tenderest affection. His real nature seems only to have thoroughly shone out when in their society. There he was loving, sportive, even to joyous frolicsomeness; a glad schoolboy almost to the very end. He was remarkably generous and charitable, even to strangers; his hand was almost always open; but he gave so unostentatiously that it was not until after his death half his kindly deeds became known. He had a spirit which was absolutely above any of the corrupting temptations of money and rank. He was very poor at one time; and during his poverty he was beginning to make his reputation in the House of Commons.

It is often said that a poor man feels nowhere so much out of place, nowhere so much at a disadvantage, nowhere so much humiliated, as in the House of Commons. Macaulay felt nothing of this kind. He bore himself as easily and steadfastly as though he had been the eldest son of a proud and wealthy family. It did not seem to have occurred to him when he was poor that money was lacking to the dignity of his intellect or his manhood; or when he was rich that money added to it. Certain defects of temper and manner, rather than of character, he had which caused men often to misunderstand him, and sometimes to dislike him. He was apt to be overbearing in tone, and to show himself a little too confident of his splendid gifts and acquirements—his marvellous memory, his varied reading, his overwhelming power of argument. He trampled on men's prejudices too heedlessly, was inclined to treat ignorance as if it were a crime, and to make dulness feel that it had cause to be ashamed of itself. Such defects as these are hardly worth mentioning, and would not be mentioned here, but that they serve to explain some of the misconceptions which were formed of Macaulay by many during his lifetime, and some of the antagonisms which he unconsciously created. Absolutely without literary affectation, undepressed by early poverty, unspoiled by later and almost unequalled success, he was an independent, quiet, self-relying man, who, in all his noon of fame, found most happiness and sympathy in the companionship of those he loved, and who, from first to last, was loved most tenderly by those who knew him best. He was buried in Westminster Abbey in the first week of the new year, and there truly took his place among his peers.—"A History of Our Own Times," by Justin M'Carthy, M. P.

Concentration in Business.

A writer in the Economist warns merchants and others against engaging in business foreign to their legitimate vocation. Successful business men, he claims, are of a conservative nature. Like skillful generals, they mass their forces in solid columns, instead of thinning ranks in trying to cover a wide area of ground. Solid battalions resist successfully the fierce onslaughts of the enemy and win the day, while weak columns go down at the first charge of the bayonet. Merchants who concentrate their energies and talents upon their legitimate business and let outside matters alone, keep their affairs well in hand, and are therefore fortified against sudden disaster. When they, however, begin, in addition to selling merchandise, to go into outside speculations, they weaken their forces and try to cover too much ground. A merchant cannot run a store and farm safely side by side; either the one or the other will suffer. Dry goods and silver mines do not mix well together, when the same hand guides both. A collision detrimental to one or both interests will sooner or later occur. A manufacturer should not attempt to raise sheep because he uses their fleece in his mills. His business is to see that out of every pound he buys he turns out as many yards of goods as it is possible to do and produce a good fabric. Here is enough to occupy his time profitably, without buying land and going into sheep husbandry. With many business men the trouble is not so much in making money as to keep it when it is made. They are of a restless temperament, never satisfied, always on the qui vive eager for speculation and ready to dabble in outside ventures. They speculate in stocks, take a venture in grain or pork, risk largely in wool or cotton, and are always willing to subscribe handsomely for the shares of gold or silver mines. Such men lack the power of concentration. With divided mind, divided energies and divided capital, they are scattered over too wide a surface, and at the first wave of a panic they go down into insolvency and financial ruin.

Helping a Fellow Up.

Tommy is tugging away at another urchin who is pitifully crying on the ground.

"What are you doing, Tommy?"

"O! only helping a fellow up!"

That is right, Tommy. Now, take that as your motto through life, to help a fellow up.—Covenant.

Origin of 'Blanket.'

In the reign of Edward the Third there were at Bristol three brothers, who were eminent clothiers and woolen weavers, and whose family name was Blanket. They were the first persons who manufactured that comfortable material which has ever since been called by their name, and which was then used for peasant's clothing. At the same period all the brewers and bakers were women; and when men first began to engage in these occupations it was thought so strange that they were called men brewers and men bakers.—Scottish American Journal.

STATE NEWS.

Judge Schenck had a glorious time in Currituck Sound last week, after Dare court. He distinguished himself at Palmor Island Shooting Club, at Josephus Banm's, by bagging seventy-five ducks and a wild goose.—Elizabeth City Economist.

Wild geese and ducks it is said, now abound in our sounds.—Newbernian.

A survey of Beaufort harbor by the United States Engineer Corps, presumably in connection with a proposed inland ship route, is about to commence.—Newbernian.

Gen. Nelson A. Miles, the new Chief Signal Officer, or "Old Probs," as more popularly known, was for some years commandant in this city. He is an officer of great ability, and made many friends here.—Raleigh News and Observer.

Major Allen Compton, a well-known citizen of Orange county while riding near Joseph Vincent's mill in this county, on last Saturday fell from his horse over a fence, and striking on his head broke his neck. The horse was not frightened; but stood until disengaged. Deceased was sixty years old or more.—Alamance Gleaner.

The Ore Knob Company in Ashe county recently declared a dividend of 25 cents on the share. The stock consists of 250,000 shares, making a total of $37,500. This is the fifth dividend which the company has declared. Several parties from the North are in the city prospecting for the establishment of other reduction works.—Charlotte Observer.

During our last Court, Judge Graves was frequently importuned to accept insufficient bonds from parties convicted and sentenced to pay the costs and small fines; but in every instance he refused, saying that a bond that could not be enforced at law, one on which the money could not be collected, amounted to nothing. His position is a sound one.—Warrenton Gazette.

Col. Calvin J. Cowles, and others of Charlotte have been astonished at the sudden tumble of Copper Knob stock. A New York telegram says: 'The failure of Mr. William Brandreth, of the Copper Knob Mining Company, caused a stampede in that stock to-day. It went from 72 to 10c. a share, and demoralized the entire stock market by destroying a good tone it seemed to be gathering. This stock was the nearest par of any on the list, and there is no change in the mine. But Mr. Braudreth was too heavily loaded with it."—Farmer and Mechanic.

Mr. Willis Harpe, of Brassfields, has the largest hog in the country, of his age. It is only fourteen months old and weighs six hundred pounds. And Mr. Ruffin Holmes, of the same neighborhood, has an older one that will weigh over seven hundred pounds.

The Chicago Times says: Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure is highly endorsed by ministers, judges, physicians, surgeons; by men of literary and scholarly distinction, and by individuals in all the walks of life.

Ague Cure

Is a purely vegetable bitter and powerful tonic, and is warranted a speedy and certain cure for Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Intermittent or Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, and all malarial disorders. In miasmatic districts, the rapid pulse, coated tongue, thirst, lassitude, loss of appetite, pain in the back and loins, and coldness of the spine and extremities, are only premonitions of severer symptoms, which terminate in the ague paroxysm, succeeded by high fever and profuse perspiration.

It is a startling fact, that quinine, arsenic and other poisonous minerals, form the basis of most of the "Fever and Ague Preparations," "Specifics," "Syrups," and "Tonics," in the market. The preparations made from these mineral poisons, although they are palatable, and may break the chill, do not cure, but leave the malarial and their own drug poison in the system, producing quinism, dizziness, ringing in the ears, headache, vertigo, and other disorders more formidable than the disease they were intended to cure. AYER'S AGUE CURE thoroughly eradicates these noxious poisons from the system, and always cures the severest cases. It contains no quinine, mineral, or any thing that could injure the most delicate patient; and its crowning excellence, above its certainty to cure, is that it leaves the system as free from disease as before the attack.

For Liver Complaints, AYER'S AGUE CURE, by direct action on the liver and biliary apparatus, drives out the poisons which produce these complaints, and stimulates the system to a vigorous, healthy condition.

We warrant it when taken according to directions.

A GREAT REVELATION.

Some Valuable Thoughts Concerning Human Happiness and Timely Suggestions About Securing It.

Synopsis of a Lecture Delivered by Dr. Chas. Craig Before the Metropolitan Scientific Association.

The free and independent thought of this age accepts statements only where they are proven to be truth, while the development of mental power seems equally great in every other department of life. The valuable inventions of the day are counted by thousands. The increase of scientific study is universal. The spirit of inquiry in all fields is so marked as to cause

COMMENT ON EVERY SIDE,

while people seem investigating and advancing in every direction which can help them morally, mentally or physically. This is specially true of the human body and everthing which concerns it, and the truths which the people have found, even in the last fifty years, are simply marvelous. How really ignorant some cultured and supposeably scientific people were only a few years ago, as compared with the present day, may be better understood from a few illustrative facts. A prominent writer prepared an elaborate essay to prove that steamships could never cross the Atlantic, and his pamphlet was issued just in time to be carried by the first steamer that went to England. People once believed that the heart was the seat of life and health. It is now known that this organ is only a pump, simply keeping in motion what other and more important organs of the body have created and transformed. It was once supposed that if a person felt a pain in the back, the liver was deranged; if a pain came in the lower chest the lungs were affected and consumption was near; it is now known that a pain in the back indicates diseased kidneys, while troubles in the lower chest arise from a disordered liver and not imperfect lungs. A severe pain in the head was once thought to come from some partial derangement of the brain; it is now known that troubles in other parts of the body and away from the head, cause headaches and that only by removing the cause can the pain be cured. It is a matter of that Gen. Washington was bled to death. His last illness was slight, and caused principally by weakness. A physician was called who 'bled him copiously.' Strange to say, the patient became no better. Another doctor was called, who again took away a large amount of the vital fluid. Thus in succession four physicians drew away the life of a great man who was intended by nature for an old age, and who prematurely died—murdered by malpractice—bled to death. That was the age of medical bleeding!"

The speaker then graphically described another period which came upon the people, in which they assigned the origin of all diseases to the stomach, and after showing the falsity of this theory, and that the kidneys and liver were the causes of disease, and that many people are suffering from kidney and liver troubles to-day who do not know it, but who should know it and attend to them at once, continued:

"Let us look at this matter a little more closely. The human body is the most perfect and yet the most delicate of all created things. It is capable of the greatest results and it is liable to the greatest disorders. The slightest causes sometimes seem to throw its delicate machinery out of order while the most simple and common sense care restores and keeps them in perfect condition. When it is remembered that the amount of happiness or misery we are to have in this world is independent upon a perfect body, is it not strange that simple precautions and care are not exercised? This is one of the most vital questions of life. People may avoid it for the present, but there is certain to come a time in every one's experience when it must be faced.

"And here pardon me for relating a little personal experience. In the year 1870 I found myself losing both in strength and health. I could assign no cause for the decline, but it continued, until finally I called to my aid two prominent physicians. After treating me for some time they declared I was suffering from Bright's disease of the kidneys, and that they could do nothing more for me. At this time I was so weak I could not raise my head from the pillow and I

FAINTED REPEATEDLY

My heart beat so rapidly it was with difficulty I could sleep. My lungs were also badly involved; I could retain nothing upon my stomach, while the most intense pains in my back and bowels caused me to long for death as a relief. It was at this critical juncture that a physical longing which I felt (and which I most firmely believe was an inspiration), caused me to send for the fearless of a plant I had once known in medical practice. After great difficulty I at last secured them and began their use in the form of tea. I noticed a lessening of the pain at once; I began to mend rapidly; in five weeks I was able to be about and in two months I became perfectly well and have so continued to this day. It was only natural that such a result should have caused me to investigate most thoroughly. I carefully examined fields in medicine never before explored. I sought the cause of physical order and disorder, happiness and pain, and I found the kidneys and liver to be the governors, whose motions regulate the entire system."

After describing at length the offices of the kidneys and liver, and their important part in life, the doctor went on to say:

"Having found this great truth, I saw clearly the cause of my recovery. The simple vegetable leaf I have used was a food and restorer to my well-nigh exhausted kiddeys and liver. It had come to them when their life was nearly gone and by its simple, yet powerful influence had purified, strengthened and restored them and saved me from death. Realizing the great benefit which a knowledge of this truth would give to the world I began in a modest way, to treat those afflicted and in every case I found the same which I have experienced. Not only this but many, who were not conscious of any physical trouble but who, at my suggestion, began the use of the remedy which had saved my life, found their health steadily improving and their strength continually increasing. So universal, where used, was this true, that I determined the entire world should share in its results, and I therefore placed the formula for its preparation in the hands of Mr. H. H. Warnerner of Rochester, N. Y., a gentleman whom I had cured of a severe kidney disease, and who, by reason of his personal worth, high standing and liberality in endowing the Astronomical Observatory and other public enterprises, has become known and popular to the entire country. This gentleman at once began the manufacture of the remedy on a most extensive scale, and to-day, Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, the pure remedy that saved my life, is known and used in all parts of the continent.

"I am aware a prejudice exists toward proprietary medicines, and that such prejudice is too often well founded, but the value of a pure remedy is no less because it is a proprietary medicine. A justifiable prejudice exists toward quack doctors, but is it right that this prejudice should extend towards all the doctors who are earnestly and intelligently trying to do their duty? Because Warner's Safe Kindney and Liver Cure saved my life before it became a proprietary medicine, is it reasonable to expect that it will not cure others and keep still more from sickness now that it is sold with a government stamp on the wrapper? Such a theory would be childish."

The doctor then paid some high compliments to American science, and closed his lecture as follows:

"How to restore the health when broken and how to keep the body perfect and free from disease must every be man's highest study. That one of the greatest revelations of the present day has been made in ascertaining the true seat of health to be in the kidneys and liver, all scientists now admit and I can but feel that the discovery which I have been permitted to make, and which I have described to you, is destined to prove the greatest, best and most reliable friend to those who suffer and long for happiness, as well as to those who desire to keep the joys they now possess."

EXTRACTS FROM A YOUNG LADY'S LETTERS HOME.

NEW YORK, November 1, 1880.

I am afraid sometimes that my letters must appear to you mere jumbles. I have so many things to write about, I cannot give one letter up to one subject alone. New York presents so many sides—literary, charitable, religious, artistic, industrial. Now a day passes but something fresh is presented on all these great topics, and I want to tell you a little about everything I see and hear, as well as the work I am doing.

* * * * *

I have been all over Greenwood, all over one of the Cunard steamers, to the top of Trinity church tower, to the rooms of the New York Historical Society, to the Lenox Library. You are not allowed breathing time here. Every day seems to bring some especial reason for going to some especial place with some especial somebody; and the weather has been so fine that I thought I had better do all the sight-seeing possible before real winter sets in. I don't wonder New Yorkers are proud of their great city. Millions have been spent here for the whole world to enjoy and be benefited by.

* * * * *

At the Historical Rooms we were shown Dr. Hawks' collection; very interesting. It ought to belong to North Carolina. I saw there the only pictures by the old masters that I have ever been able really to admire. They say that a love for these works is like a taste for certain epicurean dishes: it has to be developed by careful cultivation. You showed me once something Dr. Arnold wrote about it, to this effect: that if you find yourself not able to admire what the whole world had come to stamp as admirable, you had better say nothing, but be sure the fault is in yourself and your own want of cultivation.

* * * * *

The Young Woman's Christian Association is doing a great work for the working women of New York. Every night they throw open a handsome, warm, well-lit reading room and library where one finds all the papers, &c., of the day. The library is full of the best books, and besides free lessons are give there in photo-crayon and several other branches of decorative arts. Miss L. and I have spent several evenings there, and I do enjoy it. There is a bureau also for obtaining work. Ladies in want of work, and ladies in want of work-women, go there and are suited.

* * * * *

On election day (2d) we had holiday which I spent in my room painting. We did not dream of going out, supposing the streets would be disorderly. But everything was quiet and as usual. I rejoice that the great processions and political meetings are over. I find nearly everybody I meet a Republican, and all of them quite tender of my feelings, as if I might be hurt at hearing of the Republican triumphs. I am so glad I never have been in the habit of expressing my valuable political opinions. It is no effort for me to hold my tongue. I have heard only one political speech since I came: by Treasurer Sherman, in Cooper Union hall, to an immense and enthusiastic crowd. He is a fine speaker, dignified and strong; but once is enough. * * * At breakfast on the 3d we heard that Garfield was elected, and how dear old North Carolina had gone.

* * * * *

November 6th.—I had the pleasure last night of hearing Mr. Hughes, the author of "Tom Brown," make a speech at "Cooper" Union in favor of "Co-operative Labor." Ever since I read his book, "The Manliness of Christ," I have loved him.

There was a fine audience, and a fine band of music, which commenced the evening by playing "God Save the Queen," and gave us music during the intermissions. Mr. George William Curtis was master of ceremonies, and introduced Mr. Hughes, saying: "To introduce the author of 'Tom Brown' to an American audience is almost as superfluous as to introduce the author of 'Robinson Crusoe.'"

* * * The story-teller is the great magician. * * * But not alone to meet the distinguished author have we met here. The friend of the working classes, he has put in practice what he has preached. (Here Mr. Cooper entered and the cheers of the assembly were deafening.) England, the land of Shakespeare, of Milton, of Mary Somerville, of Florence Nightingale—this beautiful England, great and powerful and noble though she is, is nevertheless the home of grinding poverty and ghastly suffering. To stretch out the hand to assist this suffering is the work of Christian co-operation. Mr. Hughes' object in this country explained: his colony established in Tennessee—a newer and a better New England in the West—no exclusiveness, no bigotry there." Bids him welcome, &c.

Mr. Hughes then read his lecture after a few more explanatory words: A great social movement of first-class importance; occupied his mind for thirty years. Social problems the same everywhere. Great question of present day is how to become rich in quickest and easiest manner. Great fish in the struggle eat up the little fish; men, instead of living for, live upon each other. Various remedies proposed. Germany the headquarters of that dangerous state Socialism—called Nihilism in Russia and Communism in France and Italy. But, though there exists a healthy antagonism to these, still in all, the idea of dependence on the State prevails. In England alone we perceive that relief for the people must come from co-operation among themselves. Gives facts concerning some of these combinations—their numbers, influence, progress, &c.; principles on which they are formed, how they work, &c.; the colony in Tennessee—its hopes, objects and how to organize; independence of the working classes and their self-respect secured. Start on your own funds; don't go round borrowing from rich men. "Do to others as you would have them do to you" is the rule. This is the beginning and the end of co-operation.

* * * * *

Mr. Hughes has white hair, top of his head bald; wears side-whiskers, glasses; talks like all the Englishmen I have heard. I do love him. And I enjoyed seeing and hearing him very greatly. It was interesting to see Mr. Cooper in connection with such an appeal for working men. No man has done what he has in this country for that class, and how they do reverence him. He comes to Cooper quite often, taking a constant interest in it. We all survey him with so much affectionate awe. How must the old man, eighty-seven years of age, feel when he looks at that great building, full of workers; enters that handsome lecture hall, filled with eager listeners, who have all that the best advantages of the land can offer, free, through his beneficence. How enviable his feelings! He certainly has labored for the good of his fellowmen and done for them as he would have wished others had done for him. He never had but six-months' schooling in his life; apprenticed to a coach-maker when a boy, and went into trade when he grew older: a plain, hard-working, ill-educated man—successful in all that he undertook, never contracted a debt, and never had to pay any interest. To this, it is said, he attributes his prosperity. As wealth rolled up in his hands he became foremost in all public enterprises—Croton aqueduct for one. Friend and promoter of all applications of science to the industrial arts, he took an active part in the Board of Education, and his resolve to build Cooper Institute arose from his desire that the working classes should receive certain advantages that the common school system could not afford. This Institute has cost him $2,000,000.—Here are scientific lectures going on every night in a hall equipped for the purpose, a well filled library and reading room thronged every night, night-schools and drawing classes for those who cannot attend in the daytime. Almost every branch of industrial and ornamental painting and drawing is taught; telegraphy is taught. An addition has within a year been made to the main building for the use and encouragement of inventors, and where their models may be exibited to the best advantage. * * * I could never tell you all. This is enough to interest you I hope.

* * * * *

Men and boys who work all day long in the various trades and factories come to these night-schools for an education, and work at their books from 7 o'clock till 10. Some have graduated here after four years who have never missed a night after their day's toil. What an example of persevering energy. When I see all these things going on around me I wonder at these people; and I wonder, too, at our young people at home, when I think how many of them are throwing away far greater opportunities, spending their days at school and at college in anything but study and hard work, as if an education was nothing, habit nothing, and an honorable ambition nowhere at all. * * * However, I may as well descend from the hights of superior wisdom and virtue and describe my visit to the Metropolitan Museum, and some of the fine churches I have seen lately.

* * * * *

I have been very wicked. I have been to hear Beecher preach, and I have been to the Academy of Music to hear Gerster sing. But I don't expect to make a practice of doing either. Shut your eyes when Gerster is trilling and you will think you are in a whole grove-full of singing birds.

I shall look for W. B, P.'s articles in the News, on North Carolina gold mines, with interest. Am glad he is going to write them up. I wish our North Carolina newspapers were to be met with here; how I would seize upon one in these great public reading rooms, though I never would read them at home. Other people would read them too, and more would get to be known about our people and our State. We ought to send missionaries here to teach these Northerners that we are civilized Christians out South.

REPORT OF AGENT OF EVANGELISTIC LABOUR.

[Approved by the Synod of North Carolina and published in the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN by the request of the Synod.]

Your Agent respectfully submits the following report relative to Evangelistic Work in the Synod of North Carolina.

Orange Presbytery does not co-operate with the Assembly's Committee. This Presbytery has in its bounds 60 churches, of which 42 contributed to this cause and 18 did not. The total amount raised for this cause is $500.

Orange Presbytery has no Evangelist for the whole of his time. It has two ministers employed as Evangelists, each for one-fourth of his time, and has raised $100 in the evangelistic field for their support. Settled ministers have also done something in the way of supporting field churches and preaching at missionary points, and with good results.

The evangelical field in this Presbytery is reported to be large and promising. There are no less than 18 counties within the bounds of this Presbytery, with no Presbyterian church in them. And there are 9 counties with but one Presbyterian church each. Thus we may say, the greater part of 27 counties, are destitute of Presbyterian churches and without Presbyterian preaching.

Concord Presbytery does not co-operate with the Assembly's Committee. This Presbytery has 36 churches, of which 30 gave to this cause and 6 did not. The total amount raised was $600.

Concord Presbytery has one Evangelist in the field for the whole of his time. Under the ministrations of this Evangelist, 11 members have been added to Norwood church in Stanly county. This church has completed a handsome house of worship, purchased a bell and an organ, and has pledged itself to pay next year $250 towards the salary of the Evangelist. This year Norwood church raised $200, and the other churches of the Presbytery $400, making a total of $600 for the Evangelistic work.

Some outside work has been done by settled ministers, especially in exploring new fields with a view to their occupation in future.

The evangelistic field in this Presbytery is both wide and promising. There are 6 counties within the bounds of Concord Presbytery that have no Presbyterian church in them, 4 counties that have but one church each; making 10 counties which present a wide area of destitution, having little or no Presbyterian preaching.

Concord Presbytery at its spring meeting divided its churches into two sections and appointed a committee in each to raise the funds and support an Evangelist in each region. The eastern section embraces Stanly county, and the western the territory beyond the Blue Ridge. The eastern section succeeded at once in putting Rev. J. H. Thornwell in the Stanly field and in raising his support. The western section have not yet been able to put a man in their field, but they hope soon to be able to do so. This is considered the beginning—and by the blessing of God, Concord Presbytery hopes ere long to have the gospel preached in every county in her vast field.

Fayetteville Presbytery co-operates with Assembly's Committee to the extent of giving 15 per cent of its receipts for this cause to the General Assembly's Committee, and asking nothing from them. This Presbytery has 50 churches, of which 34 contributed to evangelistic labour and 16 did not. The total amount raised for evangelistic fund was $180.

Fayetteville Presbytery has no Evangelist for the whole of his time. Some missionary work has been done by settled ministers, and one minister has given one-fourth of his time to this work, and a church of more than 20 members has been organized at Cameron. The field in this Presbytery seems to be nearly occupied, there being no county in the bounds of this Presbytery without a Presbyterian church, and but one county having only one church in it. The Evangelistic field of this Presbytery includes a large part of Montgomery county and a part of Moore county. The Presbytery has resolved to cultivate this field and has sent out two committees to spy out the land, and see where an Evangelist might best labour. They hope for encouraging results.

Wilmington Presbytery does not co-operate with the Assembly's Committee. This Presbytery has 33 churches, of which 17 contributed to evangelistic work and 16 did not. The total amount raised for this cause was $52.

Wilmington Presbytery has no regular Evangelist, but has one licentiate engaged in missionary labours upon such a salary as can be raised in the field. Some missionary work has been done by settled ministers and always with good results.

There are within the bounds of this Presbytery, one county with no Presbyterian church and five counties with but one in each. The missionary field is reported to be wide and promising, including the greater part of seven counties.

This Presbytery has been greatly hampered in this work by a debt contracted a few years ago. This debt has been all paid, and the outlook is more favorable for the future. It ought to be said further, that the main efforts of this Presbytery have been directed to grouping its feeble churches. Three groups have been formed and supplied and the men working them are mostly engaged in Evangelistic work.

Mecklenburg Presbytery does not co-operate with the Assembly's Committee. This Presbytery has 47 churches, of which 38 contributed to this cause and 9 did not. The total amount raised for Evangelistic fund was $800.

Mecklenburg Presbytery has one Evangelist for his whole time and two for portions of their time.

This Presbytery has been employing Evangelists for years. Churches have been gathered and grouped and placed in pastorates. Their main efforts have been directed towards building up these groups of churches, and in several cases, they have been so successful that they are now ready to subdivide. The men cultivating these groups are mainly doing evangelistic work. Settled ministers have done much of this work in destitute regions and our cause is advancing in a very encouraging manner. Three new workers, it is expected, will be put in the field during the year to come. The evangelistic field in this Presbytery is large and full of hope.

There are in the bounds of Mecklenburg Presbytery 4 counties with no Presbyterian church in them, and 5 counties with but one Presbyterian church in each, making the greater part of nine counties destitute of the ministrations of our church.

Summary.—The Synod of North Carolina has 5 Presbyteries, 226 Churches and 18,356 communicants

Of these five Presbyteries, only one (Fayetteville,) co-operates with the Assembly's Committee, and that only in part.

Of the 226 churches, 161 have given to this cause and 65 have not. The total amount contributed in the Synod to evangelistic work is not quite $2,300, an average of about 12½ cents per communicant.

Synod includes within its bounds 94 counties. Of these there are 29 counties with no Presbyterian church, 24 counties with but one Presbyterian church in each, and consequently 53 counties with wide areas of destitution. For this vast field there are two Evangelists employed for the whole of their time, and five Evangelists who give each one-fourth of his time to this work; and that principally in old fields and not in purely missionary territory.

Conclusion.—With these facts before us, whilst we may gratefully acknowledge and rejoice in the hopefulness of the work in some sections and in the promise of future activity in others;—it becomes us to call especial attention to the wide openings before us, and to observe the little that we are attempting to do, and the slow progress we are making in this, perhaps the most important work in the Synod.

It is our duty, too, to note that whilst it is true that our State is improving in material industries, universal enterprise and personal prosperity, the Church appears to lack in a degree this enterprise and prosperity, and seemingly content with her present possessions she is adding little to the conquests of Zion and reaching but one in a thousand of our destitute masses, giving but a small drop in the bucket when so many are perishing for the water of life. It is believed that the material interests of our members have been advanced; yet observe that, notwithstanding this there has been an actual falling off in some sections in the amount contributed to this cause and in the labors attempted in this department of church work. Instead of our members consecrating their additional wealth to the extension of the Redeemer's kingdom; instead of our churches urging on this blessed work; instead of our Presbyteries being full of zeal in behalf of the destitute; it would seem that we are inclined to shut our ears against our Lord's commands, to shut our hearts against the wants of dying multitudes, and with one accord to make excuse for our sinful sloth and rest content with our present condition. Much has been spoken and written of late about Presbyterian aggressiveness. Let us not be satisfied with speaking and writing. Let us at once unite and engage in doing.

In view of these facts your Agent would respectfully recommend the following action:

Resolved, That Presbyteries be urged to place evangelists in their destitute fields; that the settled ministers be urged to do as much missionary work as possible, and that the churches be urged to give freely to this exceedingly important work.

REPORT OF AGENT OF FOREIGN MISSIONS

[Approved by the Synod of North Carolina and published in the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN by the request of the Synod.]

To the Synod of North Carolina:

During the year ending April 1, 1880, there was raised for Foreign Missions in the bounds of this Synod the aggregate sum of $5,892, which is more by $988 than was raised the year before, being a little more than 32½ cents per member, an increase of 7½ cents per member over last year.

There has been increase in all the Presbyteries except Wilmington, which fell behind $25. The Presbytery of Mecklenburg leads all the others, having raised for this cause $1,742, which is more than was raised by any Presbytery in the Carolina Synods, being about 41½ cents per member.

The Sunday schools have not done as much as they did last year: 27 Sunday schools raised $618, while last year 33 Sunday schools raised $634. Only one Sunday school in Wilmington Presbytery is reported as having contributed, viz: that of First church, Wilmington, $35 30. The Sunday schools in three of the largest churches of Mecklenburg Presbytery raised a great deal more than was contributed by the congregation, viz: Charlotte First church raised $59 and the Sunday school $134; Charlotte Second church raised $5 and the Sunday school $70, Steele Creek congregation $47 and the Sunday school $86.

Ladies' missionary societies have increased and 39 such societies contributed, two more than last year. Nearly one-third of these are in Fayetteville Presbytery.

There are 226 churches in the Synod and about 160 of them are reported as helping the cause of Foreign Missions.

The largest contribution by one church was by the Statesville church, i. e. $168, the second largest was by Wilmington First church, i. e. $137.

Aggregating the contributions of the several congregations, ladies' missionary societies and Sunday schools in the following places we find this cause has been supported in several important and strong Presbyterian communities in this proportion:

Charlotte $560, Wilmington $432, Raleigh $357, Statesville $315, Newbern $163, Salisbury $155, Greensboro $126, Fayetteville $89.

If, however, the Salisbury friends had reported all they have done in this cause it is believed that place has done for Foreign Missions more than any other place in the Synod, due much to the fact that one of the young men raised there is the only ordained missionary representing this Synod in the foreign field, viz: Rev. John W. Davis, in China.

The last Wednesday in October was a day appointed by the Assembly for special prayer for the cause of Foreign Missions.

This is the report, brethren, of the Synod's work in this field for the year ending April, 1880. Since that time the ladies in our bounds have responded to the appeal of Bro. Davis and raised perhaps the sum of $1,000 to purchase a chapel for him in the great city of Soochow, China.

It is encouraging to record the increase in the gifts of our good people for several years, and there is reasonable ground for hoping this increase may continue on the part of those congregations which study their duty and try to support this most worthy effort of the Church to obey her Lord's last command to preach His gospel to all the world.

The late circulars and papers from our beloved brethren, the Secretaries of Missions at Baltimore, who are charged with the duty of disbursing our contributions, and advising us of the condition and prospects of the work, indicate much solicitude in view of the new demands created by sending out several fresh laborers in the early autumn, and the necessity that rest should be given to a number of missionary brethren who have labored long at their stations.

Let this Synod entre these brethren that they shall be supported by our continued and earnest Christian efforts to send them money and men to overtake the great work they have in hand, and which is so dear to their hearts.

This cause does not seem to be supported in some portions of the Synod as we think it should be. The Presbytery of Fayetteville, reporting 5,081 members—the largest in the Synod, and known to be among the most substantial and intelligent people in our connection in the State, and served by devoted and beloved brethren in the ministry—raised $357 only for Foreign Missions in one year, and most of this was contributed by ladies' missionary societies and Sunday schools. In Wilmington Presbytery only one church raised money for Foreign Missions through its Sunday schools.

About 62 churches are reported as not helping this cause: 6 in Concord, 10 in Mecklenburg, 11 in Fayetteville, 15 in Wilmington and 20 in Orange.

Synod would do well to canvass these matters, while considering this report, and invite members representing those parts of our bounds which seem to come short in this good work to report touching the same.

As the months of May and June are the annual time for collections to be made for this cause, your Agent would suggest for the adoption of Synod the following recommendation.

[The recommendation as adopted by Synod has already been published.]

A LITTLE FURTHER ON.

"A little further on," we say—
"A little farther on"—
When the hope deferred makes long delay,
And few delights are won;
To patient waiting still resigned,
We fortify the heart and mind,
Assured the treasure we will find
A little further on.

To-day we suffer grief and pain,
And thorns our path annoy;
The biting winds and beating rain
Our tender buds destroy;
And yet a little further on
The storms tempestuous are gone,
And tranquility we come upon
A miracle of joy.

Though dull and dark these days may be,
And full of sore distress,
Though naught around us we may see
To comfort or to bless,
A little further on our eyes
Are greeted with unclouded skies,
And from Love's ark an angel flies
To cheer our loneliness.

Though suddenly, and all too soon,
Day's golden beams are shorn,
And at the royal hour of noon
To-night's embrace are borne,
Though deepest darkness may prevail,
Though deepest terrors may assail,
A little further on we hail,
A little further on.

"A little further on," we say,
When health and strength are gone,
And those we loved have passed away,
And we are left alone;
Still to our Father's will resigned,
We wait with patient heart and mind,
Assured that peace and rest we'll find
A little further on!

REPORT OF THE AGENT OF SUSTENTATION.

[Approved by the Synod of North Carolina and published in the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN by the request of the Synod.]

Your Agent of Sustentation, would make the following report: The facts and figures embodied in it have been furnished by the minutes of the last Assembly, the annual report of the Assembly's Treasurer for Sustentation, and the statements of the several Presbyterial Agents of Sustentation, within the bounds of the Synod. The year covered by the report ends April 1st 1880, and corresponds with the financial year of the Assembly.

1st. Your attention is first directed to the ministerial support within our bounds.

In the Synod, we have 114 ordained ministers, 9 licentiates, and 226 churches.

The amount paid in salaries, according to the Assembly's minutes is $57,821.

Concord, with 23 ministers and 3 licentiates pays $11,141; Fayetteville with 19 ministers and 2 licentiates, pays $9,974; Mecklenburg, with 28 ministers and 1 licentiate, pays $12,586; Orange, with 29 ministers and 1 licentiate, pays $14,727; Wilmington, with 15 ministers and 2 licentiates, pays $9,393. In Synod, 114 ministers and 9 licentiates. Total amount of salaries, $57,821.

Average salary actually paid laboring ministers is as follows:

Concord,	with 3689	communicants,	$655
Fayetteville,	" 5081	do.	665
Mecklenburg,	" 4227	do.	572
Orange,	" 3621	do.	640
Wilmington,	" 1735	do.	854
Synod	$18,353	do.	$651

In obtaining this average only laboring ministers with charges and fully occupied have been considered.

The average salary thus estimated, as paid in the Synod is $35 greater than last year. If the salaries paid in the larger towns and cities were excluded from the calculation, the average salary given village and country pastors would be much smaller than that reported.

According to the report of Presbyterial Agents the average salary promised is:

In Concord	$655
In Fayetteville	714
In Mecklenburg	...
In Orange	700
In Wilmington	800

Some of the agents state that their estimates are only approximated, and the average of the salaries actually paid as reported in the Assembly's minutes furnishes the best test of ministerial support in the Synod. The amount reported as paid for the maintenance of laboring ministers within our bounds is $467 greater than last year, and this cause is making some progress in the Synod. But we are persuaded that our people are not fully alive to the importance of giving their ministers an adequate support, if they would meet their obligations to the Divine Head of the Church, increase the spiritual power and efficiency of their preachers, and promote their own religious welfare. God has given plain directions, in the Scriptures, as to the maintenance of those called to expound His Word, and the Great Head of the Church has declared that "The laborer is worthy of His hire" and that "they which preach the Gospel should live of the Gospel." That persons may preach to churches, under peculiar circumstances without adequate compensation, just as they may render gratuitous service to the needy in other departments of effort is fully admitted. But the student of the Scriptures will find that they apply the principle of just recompense for labor done, to minister, and people, as well as to other relations of business, and secular life. None professing allegiance to Christ can neglect their obligations to His ministry, without palpably disregarding the laws of the Redeemers' kingdom.

That there is some neglect in this matter is very evident. Ministers in cities and large towns, may be sufficiently, or even liberally supported in some cases, yet even among these little provision is generally made for the wants of a growing family, or the infirmities of age. A large majority of our ministers in villages, and in country charges, receive so inadequate a stipend from the churches served, that they cannot maintain their families, and educate their children upon the income derived from preaching. As the result of defective support, ministers are often driven into various secular pursuits, in order to live and they become associated in the minds of their people, with the farm, the mill, the store or the academy, rather than with the sanctuary and Gospel ordinances. Thus occupied their attention is distracted, their studies are interrupted, their devotional is impaired, and their ministerial efficiency lessened.

As a natural consequence of the ministry being forced into worldly callings for subsistence, the people suffer as well as their pastors. They are not as well taught or trained, or visited, or prayed for as they might be if greater fidelity was shown in supporting their ministers, and relieving them from worldly cares.

Such considerations as regard for Christ's authority, a desire for ministerial efficiency and concern for the religious development of our churches, enforce the claims of a more liberal ministerial support, and illustrate its vital importance to the progress of piety.

2d. The next subject claiming attention is Sustentation.

Under this branch of Home Missions, we are accustomed to consider all funds collected, and measures taken for sustaining our more feeble churches, supplying them with the means of grace, and providing them with houses of worship. During the year the Presbyteries have contributed to sustentation objects as follows:

	Cause.	Ass'y Com.	Rec'd.	Dis'd
Concord contributed	$ 316	$ 19	$ 0	$316
Fayetteville "	234	187	150	225
Mecklenburg "	1,089	724	0	0
Orange "	704	444	315	315
Wilmington "	107	7	0	80
In Synod	$2,492	$1831

Some of our Presbyteries do their sustentation work through their own committees, and others in connection with the Assembly's Committee, while some churches or individuals, in every Presbytery, have sent their sustentation funds to the Assembly's Committee.

The Presbyteries are generally making efforts to gronp the more feeble churches into self-sustaining pastors and in several of them this policy has been adopted with a good degree of success. Of the 226 churches in the Synod, 29 are reported vacant in the Assembly's minutes, but many of these have been supplied since the statistics in these minutes were compiled.

The following new church buildings have been reported as begun or completed in the Presbyteries during the year:

In Concord, 2; Fayetteville, 4; Mecklenburg, 2; Orange, none; Wilmington, 1.

The parsonages owned are as follows;

In Concord, 6; Fayetteville, 1; Mecklenburg, 5; Orange, 5; Wilmington, 2.

3d. The third subject requiring notice is the Invalid Fund.

This Fund is raised for the purpose of aiding disabled ministers and their widows and orphans.

The contributions to it and the disbursements in the different Presbyterics have been as follows.

	Cause.	Ass'y Com.	Rec'd.	Dis'd
Concord contributed to	$115	$ 67	$ 0	$ 0
Fayetteville "	179	206	120	120
Mecklenburg "	324	261	150	150
Orange "	284	258	185	185
Wilmington "	188	187	50	50
In Synod	$1,040	$979	$505	$505

The following families or individuals have been aided:

In Concord, none; Fayetteville, 2; Orange, 3; Mecklenburg, 2; Wilmington, 1.

4th. The only other object to be mentioned in this report is the Relief Scheme.

This is a scheme sanctioned by the Assembly some years ago, and proposing to make some provisions for the family of a deceased minister, upon the condition, that during the ministers' life, a certain sum shall be annually paid, either by himself or by the church he serves.

So far as your Agent can learn, this scheme has been embraced by but three ministers, and by no church within our bounds.

[The recommendations appended have already been published.]

REPORT OF THE AGENT OF EDUCATION.

[Approved by the Synod of North Carolina and published in the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN at the request of the Synod.]

Your Agent would respectfully submit to the Synod the following Report on Education.

1. The whole number of candidates for the Gospel ministry, at present under the care of the Presbyteries composing this Synod, is fifteen (15). Last year the whole number of candidates reported was sixteen (16).

This year we report five beneficiaries. Last year we reported eleven.

2. The whole amount of money raised this year for the cause of education is $1,494.—Last year the amount raised was $1,349.

From the above statements, the following facts are obtained, which show the exact condition of this interest of our church in the bounds of this Synod.

(a) The number of candidates is one less than last year.

(b) The amount of money raised for this cause is $145 more this year than last year.

(c) While the number of candidates is substantially unchanged; and while the amount of money contributed shows an increase; yet the amount of beneficiaries is six-less this year than last year.

This would seem to indicate a growing disposition on the part of our candidates to be self-sustaining. Or its significance may be, that the more careful guarding of beneficiary education which some of our Presbyteries have inaugurated has tended to keep back the unmanly and unworthy. Upon the whole it may be said that the outlook is rather encouraging. As a Synod, we are about holding our own in the number of our candidates and the amount contributed, and for this we should be thankful.

But, your Agent would suggest, that when we consider the educational facilities located in our bounds, and the decreased numbers of candidates in other parts of our Church, we should not as a Synod be content merely to hold our own. It is easily seen that the measure of our duty and privilege is greater.

In the year 1876, the whole number of candidates for the ministry in the Southern Church was 189. In 1880, the whole number is 145, showing a decrease of 44. This decrease may be due to the stringency in money matters, which our people have so keenly felt during the past few years; or, it may be the natural ebb of the full tide which our Church experienced in former years; or, it may be the natural contraction which follows a more careful testing of our material than was formerly practiced; or, it may indicate a lower state of piety, and a corresponding indisposition on the part of Christian parents to consecrate their sons to the work of the Lord. But no matter what explanation we adopt, the fact confronts us in all its suggestiveness, that during the past five years, there has been a falling off of 44 in the number of candidates in our beloved Southern Church.

Your Agent has no new measures to propose, in order to meet this state of things.

God's plan for furnishing a ministry to His Church is for the Church to pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers into His harvest. If, as a Synod, and as a Church we fully adopt and believingly work this plan, soon the lamentation that the laborers are too few to gather the harvest will not be heard.

The following resolution is presented for the adoption of Synod.

[The resolution as adopted by Synod has already been published.]

HOW TO BE NOBODY.

It is easy to be nobody, and we will tell you how to do it. Go to the drinking saloon to spend your leisure time. You need not drink much now, just a little beer or some other drink. In the meantime, play dominoes or something else to kill time, so that you will be sure not to read any useful books. If you read anything, let it be the cheap novels of the day; thus go on keeping your stomach full and your head empty, and yourself playing time-killing games, and in a few years you will be nobody, unless you should turn out a drunkard or a professional gambler, either of whom is worse than nobody. There are any number of young men hanging around bar-parlours, just ready to graduate and be nobodies.

THOSE REPORTS.

Let no one dash this week's paper aside with the remark, "Oh, those dry Synodical Reports!" nor think that the paper is dull because it is loaded with them. You will find them profitable reading and they furnish much food for reflection.

It is one of the glories of our Presbyterian Church, and of our representative government, not only that the elder, i. e. the wiser, rule, but that the whole mass rule through their representatives. And the multitude should know, they must know, they desire to know what is done. The whole field of Synodical work is laid before the people. The light is turned on. It may be painful to see, but it is wholesome.

For instance: Does no conscience flinch at the averages? Think of it, four cents a member for Publication, twelve and a half cents a member for Evangelistic work, for sending the Gospel to the destitute and ignorant in our own State, in Texas, in our whole Southern territory, and thirty-two and a half cents a member for Foreign Missions, for sending the Gospel to fourteen hundred million people—to nine hundred million heathen! And that is what the Synod did last year.

And yet, oh! disgrace, and encouragement, too, that is more than has hitherto been done. There is improvement. Let us hope the Church is on the up grade in the march of progress, conquest and success.

Read what the Agent of Sustentation has to say about ministerial support in the Synod. His paper is chock-full of valuable and instructive figures.

The Report on Sabbath Schools (in our last issue) is cast in another mould from the usual style. It is not a mere array of statistics, and numbers do not make their due impression on our minds unless there is some comparative arithmetic, but rather a presentation of results and prospects, of facts and needs freshly and tersely put.

Every one is interested in Foreign Missions. The agent tells the Synod, and the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN tells everybody what was done in this grand department of church work. Oh! that everybody could have heard Dr. Wilson's urgent and affecting address. He said much depended in the support and progress of our missions on the response of the Synod of North Carolina.

The Agent of Education tells of the decrease of candidates for the ministry—a matter awakening the attention of every church—and points to the remedy: "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest."

It is uncomfortable to read the simple and significant figures of the report on Publication. In these days of cheap trash and solicitous underbidding of irresponsible sellers it is well to have our own imprimatur and to maintain the ancient fame of Presbyterianism for intelligent scriptural piety.

It was an advance in the Synod's work to have evangelistic labor dissociated from the report on Sustentation. It was dwarfed because of necessity, considered along with other departments of home-work. It has now a special portfolio, and the new cabinet officer made an interesting and valuable report. It is a beginning, but it is a sign, too. We look for the overtaking of that vacant territory.

The Address to the Churches emphasizes two points, viz: Ministerial Support and Godly Living. It is an earnest and stirring appeal, and, we feel sure, must do good. In some particulars it is a departure from the usual form, the recapitulation of details reported from the Presbyteries and general explorations in every department of duty. Singling out these important themes it impresses them on the conscience.

We are glad to be able to lay these various papers before the body of our Church, and to do so with such promptitude. Last week we gave the "Abstract" and a few of the shorter "Reports;" this week the Reports crowd out more varied, more interesting, but not more necessary or useful matter. Our deck is now clear for action, and we shall resume our accustomed variety. Perhaps it is not saying too much for ourselves to note that no Synod has such a fair, full and prompt showing as the Synod of North Carolina. But then we all know there is no such Synod as the Synod of North Carolina!

SOMETHING PERSONAL.

Can you not, Sir Editor, allow me to write a little editorial without your reading it? I do not ask your endorsement. Editors nod sometimes; so do you go to sleep and leave me alone. No free steed likes to be hauled back on his haunches by a curb or stiff bit.

Friendly readers, old Cerberus or rather old Jupiter Tonans, is snoozing. Don't he look placid and kind? Well, let us chat a bit about his kingdom, the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN. Do you know, I have recently met in my rambles some "big" folks, who had seen and were interested in his peculiar joy OUR paper? One distinguished man, from another state, said, "I value the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN more highly than any other paper, I take. It is a sound journal." Another, one whom the Church delights to honor, venerable in age and mature in thought, said, "You have a valuable paper in your state, the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN. I read it with great pleasure." However he had a little "but" to put in. As Jupiter is asleep, we can punch him under the ribs a little, can't we? "But your editor lacks a little sharpness; a little more "going-for people" sometimes, and sticking in his claws." That is, there is a little bending back in strait conservatism. May be, that's true! So let's call out, "Jupiter, wake up! Have you any thunder-bolts? Can you hurl one? or are you too good-natured? Hey?"

Another, a literary lady and writer, said she always turned to the Book column to learn something about the literary world and be guided. And to others, this department of the paper is more valuable than some think. It would be well, if there was more space given to criticism of books. Every minister, and numbers of cultured readers, long to know the characteristics of fresh publications.

But we wished to say, it was gratifying to know that many, outside of our State, value our good paper. We could not but think that it was and evil and a wrong that more, inside our state, did not subscribe to it, and that there was not more earnest effort made by its friends to increase largely and permanently its subscription list. Every Methodist minister, we understand, regularly canvasses for the Advocate. He does right. Let us do likewise and we will win more golden opinions, and Jupiter will smile at multiplying golden dollars!

Jupiter, wake up—more copy! Thunder out now! "This fellow hath spoken well. I'll sleep again, if you wish!"

[He awakes.]

Was it all a dream? a not unpleasant dream withal! Truly we "go for principles, not men."

[Again he sleeps.]

THE WAY IT IS.

Certain things would greatly surprise us if we had not become accustomed to them by experience; as it is, we have resolved to regard them simply as unaccountable phenomena, to be explained hereafter.

One of these things is that whenever any great move in the line of religious progress or moral reform is proposed, the first great difficulty, frequently arises from the opposition of good men, perhaps the opposition of men who are heartily in favor of the end proposed. This opposition takes different forms. Sometimes a side issue, not material in itself, is fastened upon by a sincere well-wisher, who failing in its removal, places himself, squarely in front, and combats the movement with bitterest hostility; and this in the name of principle. Oftener, perhaps, division of counsel, delays, retards, it may be prevents all progress. Various plans and methods, having each its earnest advocates, are proposed, examined, discussed. Ardor of contest begets asperity, bitter hostility, personal hate, and the advance, if advance be possible, is toilsome and tediously slow. In secular enterprises of great moment, we do not find this so. True, there is opposition in the inception, and the variety of opinions is as great as men's dispositions and habits of thought, but some line of action is determined upon, and then if all do not pull heartily together, they do not pull apart. Opposition of opinion there may be, but it is quiet and puts forth no effort.

The disaffected, we may note, too often become prophets of evil, and as is the wont of prophets of these later days, set vigorously to work to accomplish their predictions.

One other class remains to be mentioned: those who are whipped before they enter battle, and whipped all the way through. These may desire victory, or they may not, but they will never believe a good report unless verified to their senses, while every rumor of evil is accepted with avidity if not delight.

The Maine Liquor Law has, perhaps, encountered all these. The last it confronts at every turn. We may be allowed to illustrate from a letter written by Hon. Neal Dow to the Alliance News:

"I remember being at a select meeting in Ireland—in a gentleman's grounds—at which were present perhaps a hundred gentlemen and ladies of the neighbourhood, when I took special pains to show that the result of prohibition in Maine had been eminently beneficial to the people in all their interests. I fortified my statements by reading certificates from the Governor of Maine—from every member of the Executive Council—one member coming from each county—from the two Senators of Maine in the United States Congress—one from the eastern and the other from the central part of the State—from every member of the United States House of Representatives from Maine—one member from each congressional district—from a large body of clergymen assembled in a religious convention from all parts of the State—from the then mayor and every living ex-mayor of the largest city in the State—from mayors and ex-mayors of other cities—from the United States officials—from poor-house officials—and many others—all testifying to the wonderful benefits resulting from prohibition.

"I thought I had made out my case to the satisfaction of every reasonable person. I was simple enough to think so. But after I sat down a gentleman arose—not an ignoramus, but one who had passed through a great university—not a drinker, but a perfectly temperate and exemplary man. He said he had heard reports about the result of the Maine Law of a different character from those they had just listened to, and he proposed that it should be suggested to the United Kingdom Alliance to send a commission to Maine to ascertain the actual facts!

"I saw that my speech and the certificates I had read had not made the smallest impression upon this gentleman's mind! He had heard a report somewhere that the Maine Law was a failure, and he readily believed that. After he had done, I inquired of him what this Commission could do about it; if he proposed that they should reside in Maine long enough to know from personal observation what the facts were? O no, he said, they could go about and obtain the facts from people in different parts of the State. What sort of people? I asked. O! of the most respectable and reliable people he said. Very well, I replied, here you have them already at hand, from the highest and most reliable sources in the State; what could a Commission do more or better than that? I was not a little indignant, as you may well suppose, and so I said, "It is very evident that no testimony of whatever sort to the benefits of prohibition will have the smallest weight with our friend, while he yields willing and ready credence to any anonymous report that comes to him from any quarter, to show that prohibition results in no good. In other words, he will believe nothing from the highest and most reliable sources to the efficacy of prohibition; while he is ready to believe any and every rumour, coming from whatever quarter that the Maine Law has failed to be of benefit to the State.'

"Now that is precisely what you meet with every day, and many times every day, and from that class of minds it will continue to be so to the end. These people will not admit that crushing any kind of a trade by heavy penalties of fine and imprisonment—hunting the men engaged in it like thieves and pickpockets—will have any effect in diminishing that business! That is their logic."

Once more, and we now come down to the present time. A few weeks since an article appeared in some of our religious papers—(we concede that they reprobate intemperance and would be glad to see it abolished.)—An article appeared in which were incorporated statements made by Rev. Dr. L. W. Bacon, intended to show that the Maine Liquor Law was a failure. The impression made upon us, and we doubt not upon all temperance men, who read the article, was discouraging. We could not suppose that "saloon" meant less—could be made to mean less—than a groggery, a place where liquor could be readily obtained by all who sought it. We sent the article to General Dow, and, stating that we wanted to know the truth, asked for his explanation. This is his reply:

To the Editor of the N. C. Presbyterian:

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 24th, with the enclosure, has just reached me, asking for information as to the working of the Maine Law, about which so many conflicting statements are widely circulated. Persons whose sympathies are on the whiskey side find it difficult to state a plain fact in relation to the liquor question, without giving such a twist to it as to convey a false impression. The slip which you enclose contains an example of this from Dr. L. W. Bacon of Norwich, Conn.

The slip you send me contains a statement of the number of "saloons" in each State and the number of inhabitants to each. The statement is that Maine has one saloon to every one thousand people. Maine has no "saloon" in all its borders. We have secret rum shops here, run on a sly and on a small scale, in violation of law. A "saloon" is a licensed shop where liquors are sold for a drink under the law. We have no such place.

The slip says: "From 1870 to 1873 the distilleries of Maine paid a yearly average of $50,000 to the United States revenue." But now there is not a brewery nor a distillery in the State. They have all been suppressed by heavy penalties of fine and imprisonment. It is quite true, as the slip says, that we have a great work yet to do in Maine before the liquor traffic will be thoroughly suppressed, but public opinion thoroughly sustains the Maine Law, and its special friends are full of courage and are sure of complete success. One great step has already been taken in the right direction, the complete crushing out of the breweries, distilleries and wine factories, and this meets the entire approval of our people. This measure renders it more difficult for the secret rum shops to obtain their supply, and we are constantly hedging them in. Last week one of these shops in this city was searched by the sheriffs, and the whole stock in trade was contained in a flat half-pint bottle, concealed in a book, a hole being cut out in the leaves just large enough to receive it. Sometime ago another was searched and the whole stock of liquors was contained in two flat pint bottles hung to the keeper's waist (a woman), one on each side under the outer skirt. In another place beer was found concealed in a pig-pen, and in another case some bottles were found sunk in a well, connected with a string fastened to a nail driven into the well two or three inches under the surface of the water. I mention these cases that you may see what I mean by the phrase, "secret grog shops."

The liquor traffic in Maine is in a state of siege, and we are constantly advancing our parallels to its citadel; all its outer works were carried by assault long ago.

I am, very truly, yours, NEAL DOW.
Portland, Nov. 27th, 1880.

Now if there is one saloon, in the common meaning of the term, in the State of Maine, where is it? If there is one brewery, point it out. This should not be difficult to those who affirm that there are hundreds.

SYNOD OF TEXAS.

From the abstract of proceedings published in the Texas Presbyterian we gather the following items: The Synod met at Waco, Nov. 17th. From the six Presbyteries comprising the Synod there were only fifteen ruling elders in attendance; one hundred and forty-one churches were not represented by ruling elders. No elders were present from the Presbyteries of Paris, Eastern Texas or Western Texas. Forty-one ministers attended.

Rev. John. W. Neil was chosen moderator. To an overture from the Presbytery of Dallas requesting the Synod of Texas to appoint a committee to confer with a committee already appointed by the Synod of Texas (North) in reference to church work in Texas, the Synod responded by appointing said committee. The vote stood 22 to 20. The minority protested against this action on the following grounds:

1. Because the Constitution of our Church vests in the General Assembly alone the right to make arrangements for regulating all questions of conference with other ecclesiastical bodies. (See Book of Church Order, Chap. 5, Sec. VI.)

2. Because when a similar proposition, involving the same question and looking to the same results, presented by the representatives of this said Northern Church, was submitted to this Synod at its sessions in the city of Austin, Nov. 1875, this Synod responded that, "Inasmuch as the plan suggested has reference to arrangements which the Presbyteries alone can make, the Synod as such can take no action in the matter. (See pages 57 and 58, Vol. 2.)

An overture to the General Assembly was afterwards adopted, asking that body, if the existing difficulties between the two Assemblies could be removed to request the Northern Assembly to appoint a committee to confer with a similar committee of our General Assembly, to so arrange work as to avoid conflict.

On a communication from the Synod of Missouri referring to the establishment of a Theological Seminary for the West, the Synod declared it in their judgment inexpedient to establish such a Seminary at the present time.

A complaint was presented from Presbytery of Central Texas, concerning the action of Presbytery in refusing to enroll a church in which officers had not been elected. The complaint was sustained by a vote of 26 to 15.

The Synod, on request, directed the Presbytery of Central Texas to meet in the house in which Synod was holding its sessions on the adjournment of Synod, to elect an additional evangelist. Rev. R. H. Byers, D. D., gave notice of "complaint" of the action of Synod in this matter.

An overture from the Presbytery of Eastern Texas asking that that Presbytery and the Presbytery of Paris be reunited was not granted, because of lack of unanimity in the Presbytery asking for it, and the injustice of dissolving the Presbytery of Paris without an expression of opinion from it on the subject.

The following overture was directed to be presented to the next General Assembly:

The Synod of Texas respectfully asks the General Assembly to make a deliverance, defining more fully the authority of the Church and the relation thereto of the right of private judgment. The language of the deliverance of the Assembly of 1880 (page 202) seems to set the private judgment of the individual church member above the judgment of the court, and the private judgment of the inferior court above that of the superior.

DEATHS IN THE MINISTRY.

Death has been very busy. Since our last issue four of the brethren are reported as having exchanged the cross for the crown. We regret that we have not data which would enable us to give appropriate sketches of these toilers, mostly venerable toilers, in the Master's service.

Rev. WM. F. COSNER, a young minister, evangelist of Winchester Presbytery, we believe, died recently.

The Central Presbyterian thus announces the death of Rev. C. B. KING:

"The Rev. Charles Barrington King died suddenly at his residence in Savannah, Ga., on the 24th ult. He was about sixty years of age, and had been in the ministry nearly forty years. He was at one time pastor of the Presbyterian church of Columbus, Ga., and afterwards of the First Presbyterian church of Savannah. At the time of his death he had charge of the White Bluff church."

Rev. Dr. W. C. DANA, who died on 30th at his home in Charleston, S. C., was pastor of the Central Presbyterian church (Independent), and so had been for many years. Delegates to the last General Assembly will remember his appeal for the unity of Presbyterianism, in spirit at least. On that occasion he stated that he was in the forty-fifth year of his pastorate.

REV. JOHN R. MCINTOSH, died in Atlanta, Ga., on the 26th November, ult. We are indebted to a friend for the following sketch of his life:

"John R. McIntosh was born July, 1806, in Richmond county, N. C., a few miles from what is now the village of Laurinburg; was educated in the old field schools of the neighborhood, taught by Rev. Hugh McLaurin and cotemporaries, until he went to Union Seminary, Va. He was licensed about 1836–7, and his first year was located at Cheraw, S. C. The next he went to Murfreesboro, N. C., from which place he came home and took charge of Laurel Hill and Centre churches about 1839–40. In 1840–41 he was elected President of Floral College at it organization and continued in its charge until 1844, when he went to Eufaula, Ala. He married Miss Caroline M. Jewett in 1842. He preached at Centre till 1848–50 and Laurel Hill till he went to Eufaula, with general acceptance in pastoral relations. The success of Floral College under his administration was its own testimonial to capability and good management of himself and his excellent wife.

Taking charge of a Female School at Eufaula, they made much reputation there and had a lucrative school till the war put an end to it, and their earnings went like all others.

In 1866, they went to Columbus, Ga., and again worked up a good Female School, which was flourishing up to the time, about three years ago, that the health of Mrs. McIntosh seriously failed, compelling with his advanced years the abandonment of teaching.

Since then he moved to Atlanta, Ga., spending their winters there and at such places in summer as would afford possible advantage to Mrs. McIntosh.

He left one daughter, Mrs. W. H. Woods, who resides in New York city, and one son living near Macon, Ga.

His many scholars in North Carolina and South Carolina will sorrow to hear of his death, and the affliction of his bereaved partner.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

If the North Carolina Presbyterian, or any other Southern religious newspaper, should indulge in politics there would be a great outcry, and very properly, as we think. But our secular papers have been recommending a Northern religious newspaper that deals freely in politics and is decidedly anti-southern in its bearing. This is how it is. A slip is sent out from the office of said paper and our secular papers copy, frequently in their editorial columns, without knowing any thing about it.

We wish we could say what would induce every Presbyterian family in the Southern States to subscribe to the Missionary published by our secretaries for Missions. Filled with the news from the Missionaries of our Church, nothing can do so much to inspire zeal for missions and lead to liberal contributions for their support.

In every congregation there should be an earnest, hearty effort to extend the circulation of the Missionary, and right now is the time to take the matter in hand.

A correspondent of the Raleigh Christian Advocate thus shows what he doesn't know about Calvinism:

The point I wish to make is that God, being eternal, omnipresent and omniscient, must necessarily know all things and events as having already taken place, because they are within the limits of his eternal existence. And even if there were no producing causes existing but that of God Himself, we could not attribute the existence of the events to His knowledge; for the knowledge of a thing is produced by the existence of the thing itself. To know is to "perceive with certainty, to understand clearly; to be informed of" something that is, without any connection with the producing cause. With this idea the dogma of the "eternal decrees" according to Calvinism must fall to the ground.

Well, now, really! we would like to know who ever did attribute the existence of events to God's foreknowledge, as the producing cause. Calvinism must be weak indeed if it falls under such an argument!

How wondrous easy it is to knock a thing down, if you first set up the thing you want to knock down.

From accurate statistical reports and carefully compiled estimates which were published in 1875, it appears that there were then in the whole Presbyterian Church throughout the world 26,735,396 members; while at the same time the members of the churches and congregations together, were reported to number 38,860,230. If now the ratio of increase for five years has everywhere been equal to that in our own branch of the Church in this country, the membership of the whole Church must now amount to about thirty-five millions, and of the congregations to forty-five millions. If, to these figures we add the number of Lutherans in the world—and the Lutherans in doctrine approach nearly to the Calvinistic faith, and their polity is substantially Presbyterian—the number of members would be increased to more than fifty millions, representing a population of sixty five millions. Of actual church members of the Presbyterian faith and order, Germany takes the lead, having in 1875, 18,415,876. Holland comes next with 2,096,146. Then Austria with 1,912,163; Switzerland with 1,567,008, and Scotland and our own country, each with more than a million, follow in order. France has 630,000 of this faith, Piedmont 30,000, England about 150,000. Ireland about 125,000. Canada about 75,000, Australia 50,000 or more, and other countries smaller numbers. Other leading denominations of Protestant Christians have their strength wholly or almost wholly, confined to English-speaking communities throughout the world. In these communities, their numbers are estimated as follows: Episcopalians eighteen millions, Methodists and Baptists of all descriptions, the former sixteen and the latter eight millions. Congregationalists, six millions and Unitarians, one million. It will thus be seen those of Presbyterian name or faith generally outnumber those of any other Protestant faith, and that, if we count the Presbyterian and Lutherans together, they outnumber all other Protestant denominations.—Interior.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

The Richmond Christian Advocate says that Mr. McCormick, of Chicago, has sent to Judge Watkins, treasurer of the Union Theological Seminary, Virginia, his check for $30,750.

We are gratified to see from our exchanges that the health of Dr. Charles Phillips is so much restored that he has returned from New York, where he has been under treatment for a long time, to his home at Chapel Hill. He will not take work under a year.

Mr. J. H. Hill, Superintendent, requests us to acknowledge a contribution of twenty dollars to the Orphan Asylum, collected in Lumberton at a Union meeting held Nov. 25th.

We learn that the health of Rev. J. H. Colton of Morganton, N. C., and the health of his family has been almost entirely restored. They would be glad to find some place where they can labor actively in the service of the Lord at once. Mr. Colton would greatly prefer preaching to teaching but they are willing to add teaching to preaching if necessary.

On the first Sabbath in December, Beth Car church, in Wilmington Presbytery, unanimously voted to call Rev. A. McFadyen to the pastorate for one-fourth of his time. Mr. McFadyen has been serving this congregation with great acceptance, as stated supply for about eleven years.

CHURCH AT LITTLETON, N. C.

Rev. T. U. Faucette writes: My name was first on the list of supplies for the church at Littleton. I paid them a pastoral visit and preached to attentive congregations morning and night of the third Sabbath in this month.

This little, young, but growing church feels deeply the loss of their former pastor. They need, and are anxious to secure the service of a pastor, who will preach for them at least once a month, regularly, and visit from house to house, and thus carry home the precious doctrines of our Church to the individuals, and households, that are friendly to the spread of Presbyterianism in that section of country. If a suitable man can be employed and sustained in that field, there is a fair prospect of considerable increase in numbers, and of great usefulness to the whole region. They now need the good influence of an enterprising, young Presbyterian church in that community. Only let proper and efficient means be used, and the work will go forward.

AN APPEAL.

In the southeastern part of Randolph county, where I have been preaching several months, I expect at an early day to organize a church consisting of fifteen members. Of those fifteen members nine of them will be heads of families and seven of them will be males. And counting the baptized children also, I may say, instead of a church of fifteen members, a church of twenty-one members. In the whole of Randolph county there is only one Presbyterian church, and there is no resident Presbyterian preacher in the county. The point where it is now proposed to establish a church is only ten miles from the line of the Cape Fear & Yadkin Valley Railroad, and near Deep river; it is also near the cotton factories on this river, which are contributing so much to the enterprise, population and prosperity of this part of the State. A central and in every respect a decidedly eligible lot has been secured on which to build a house of worship. A house of worship is a necessity. The work is now suffering from a lack of one. I have been preaching in a small school house, which is built of logs and too open for comfort and too small for the size of the congregation. Only about three hundred dollars more than has already been contributed at home is needed to build a neat, comfortable, sufficiently capacious house. The people at home have thus proven themselves to be zealous, liberal and self-sacrificing. Their means are exhausted. In this hour of need they appeal to every lover of Presbyterianism to come to their assistance. Now who will help them? Who will give something of what God has given them for the progress of Presbyterianism in building a Presbyterian church in Randolph county to be called Calah?

Address your communications to me at Pittsboro, N. C., and I will will acknowledge the receipt of same. P. R. LAW.

REVIVAL AT MEBANEVILLE.

Rev. T. J. Allison writes from Mebaneville, N. C., Dec. 2nd, 1880: We have been enjoying for several days a delightful season of grace from God. The Spirit of God has been poured out abundantly upon us, and the church has been greatly revived, and thirty-five persons have been brought to Jesus. Several others still are awakened and earnestly seeking the way of life. Several weeks ago a few members of our Church and other Christians asked me to have a series of special services in the church. They thought, and so did I, that such services might be an occasion for the revival of the Church and the conversion of souls. On the first Sabbath of November I gave notice to the congregation that services would be held in the church for a few days following the third Sabbath of November. I urged upon the Church the importance of earnest prayer, in the meantime, for the outpouring of God's Spirit upon us. In fact there was on that day a very marked solemnity and seriousness in the congregation.

The week of prayer appointed to be observed throughout the land by the Young Men's Christian Associations began on the second Sabbath of November. The week was observed by the Young Men's Christian Association of Bingham's school; and by the middle of the week a number of young men manifested the deepest interest in their personal salvation. Thursday night was the first time that I was enabled to attend. On that night the first enquiry meeting was held immediately after the closing of the prayermeeting; and several young men remained to know what they must do to be saved. By the end of that week a very deep religious solicitude pervaded the school to a very great extent. On the Sabbath morning following, as had been appointed, the services began in the church with an appropriate and excellent sermon from Rev. P. P. Winn. After the services at night an enquiry meeting was appointed and five young men remained. Rev. H. T. Darnall of Durham came up on Monday, and preached until Saturday with great acceptance and power. After he left Rev. C. N. Morrow preached some excellent and effective sermons. We feel greatly obliged to all those brethren for their earnest and faithful gospel-preaching, which was so abundantly blessed to our spiritual good, and the conversion of so many souls, and especially to Bro. Darnall who spent so many days with us, and whose faithful and clear presentation of the Gospel was so signally blessed in the conversion of souls.

There was no working upon the feelings of sinners by singing, nor by any other human revival machinery. At the close of the services the pastor in a quiet manner gave an invitation to all enquirers to remain in the church after the benediction, and they should have special prayers made for them and special instruction given to them. The whole meeting was conducted in a quiet and orderly manner. There was no need of any machining, for God's Spirit was there in great power. At times there was much weeping, and trembling, and some would seem to shake from head to foot. Though the services in the church closed last night the work is going on. Several are still seeking Jesus; and I hope and pray it may go on till all the unbelieving shall be found in Jesus. To God be all the praise and and glory that is due His matchless name for this great and good work that he has done among us. I feel that God has given us this season in answer to our prayers. And that many souls here have been converted in answer to prayer. Dear brethren if you wish a revival, a genuine revival, get your church members and Christian friends to praying for it, and it will come.

LETTER FROM REV. JOHN W. DAVIS.

SOOCHOW, CHINA, Oct. 18th, 1880.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I have the pleasure of informing you that the work of building the much needed church in Soochow has been going on for three weeks. The people in the neighborhood came in great numbers for a few days after the work begun and asked a great many questions. They feared that I was going to build a large house in foreign style; when they found out that I was about to build a one story house to be used as a Protestant chapel they showed no opposition to my work.

When I began to build, the one great question was this, "will there be any difficulty or opposition made by the neighbors?" I had some grounds for serious apprehensions. There are several wealthy men living near the newly bought place and I heard that they had determined to make trouble for me when I began to build. I discovered that the question with them was this, "What sort of a house will he build?" Hence I determined to build a hall in Chinese style. Their halls are very well adapted for audience rooms and and when built substantially they last three or four hundred years. When the neighbors came to ask about the nature of the building they always showed that they had been laboring under a mistake, and went away apparently relieved and pleased because I was not going to build a large foreign house at all.

The district governor ordered the constable of the section of the city in which the lot lies to go and watch the place when the building began and report to him on this point, viz: "Do the neighbors show any disposition to raise a row about the proposed new building or are they quiet and peaceably disposed towards the foreigner?" For a few days I was very anxious and watchful every moment lest there should be some difficulty. But after a short time the people ceased to show much interest in the matter; the governor sent to say there was no great danger of having a disturbance and I had a visit from one of his secretaries who assured me that the governor, in view of the quiet state of affairs, had no disposition to interfere with my plans. Some governors would have secretly incited the people to make a disturbance and, then said, "I can't control the populace." This has been done again and again in China. And if I had begun to build a large house something of the kind would probably have occurred. Up to the present time, however, peace and quiet prevail, and I hope that by the time your readers see this, the work will be done.

Yours truly,
JOHN W. DAVIS.

REPORT OF AGENT OF EVANGELISTIC LABOR.

EVANGELIZATION OF THE COLORED PEOPLE.

Orange Presbytery has one colored licentiate and one church for colored people under its care, which is now under the charge of a colored minister in connection with the Northern General Assembly.

There has been no collection for this cause. About $250 have been raised to aid in the support of the colored minister referred to, in charge of the church in Newbern. There has been some preaching specially to the colored people by white ministers, and several Sabbath schools are taught by white teachers.

Concord Presbytery reports no colored minister, no church for colored people, and no contribution to this cause. The ground is fully occupied by the Northern Presbyterian Church, which has managed this work with great success.

Fayetteville Presbytery has no colored minister and has made no contribution to this object. It has two churches for colored people under the care of white sessions. Some special preaching to the colored people has been done by the ministers of this Presbytery. One minister (white) of this Presbytery preaches one-fourth of his time to the two churches above mentioned.

Wilmington Presbytery reports no colored minister, no churches for colored people, no collection raised for their evangelization. There is, however, occasional preaching by white ministers. About $85 were raised by the Presbyterians of Wilmington to aid the work in Newbern.

Mecklenburg Presbytery has no colored minister and no church for colored people, and has made no contributions for this cause. There is special preaching for the colored people occasionally by white ministers, and three or four Sabbath schools are conducted among them by white teachers.

Summary:—In the Synod we have one colored licentiate, four churches for colored people, five or more Sabbath schools for them taught by white teachers, and one white minister giving one-fourth of his time to preaching to the colored people. Besides this there is occasional preaching to them by white ministers.

Brethren, does this meagre statement come up to the measure of our duty? Are we not under obligations to these people? Can we not give them more preaching, and conduct Sabbath schools, and train them for Christ?

SUGGESTED THOUGHTS IN CONNECTION WITH A MEETING OF SYNOD.

The roll is called. Not a single elder is present from two Presbyteries out of five, and comparatively few from the others. But they did not disappoint many people by staying away. There was great talk about the coming crowd of preachers, and it might be suspected that some fowls in these parts acquired reverend sobriety in their last days. It was suggested, in our prayer meeting, that we should seek from the Lord a spiritual blessing from the assembling in the midst of us of so many ministers. It is not publicly known that anybody thought to pray for the elders. Nor is this very surprising. Only a minister now and then brought "his elder" as well as his valise; and only one of the elders thus brought by the ministers, (not sent by the sessions,) had anything to say in the Synod, at least so far as this writer knew. Our beautiful Presbyterian theory requires the elder, but when we come to practice he is nearly hid in the shade.

What a loss to the church! The elders, as a class, practical men of business, leave the management of affairs, in our higher courts, to the preachers, who are, as a class, theoretical men of study. The actual blending of the two would be a great good. Then, one reason, and a sufficient reason, for the frequent assembling of the higher courts is the bringing together of men from all parts to see one another's faces and hear one another's words, and feel one another's heart's, and so go back, each with his torch relighted at the union fire. If that feeble church, now without a pastor, it may be, had a re-inflamed elder to come back to it three times a year from Presbyteries and Synod, who can tell the result? Is it the duty of those elders to go?

OBSERVER.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

CONCORD PRESBYTERY.

Concord Presbytery held an adjourned meeting at Raleigh during the session of Synod and received F. P. Harrell, licentiate, on certificate from Fayetteville Presbytery.

A call from Prospect church, for the pastoral services of Mr. Harrell, was read, promising him $400 and use of a manse, for one-half of his time, and was placed in his hands. His acceptance being signified through a representative, Presbytery ordered that an adjourned meeting be held at Prospect church on Friday before the 1st Sabbath of December, at 11 o'clock a. m., to ordain and install him pastor of said church, if the way be clear. Rev. J. A. Ramsay was appointed to preach the sermon, Rev. P. T. Penick to charge the pastor and Rev. W. W. Pharr the people. Revs. J. Rumple, L. K. Glargow and Dr. Hepburn were appointed as alternates to the above respectively. Rom. i: 16, was assigned as a text for Mr. Harrel's trial sermon. W. W. PHARR, Stated Clerk.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

PRESBYTERIAN (SOUTH).

The Central Presbyterian learns that as officers of Mt. Horeb church in Lexington Presbytery an additional elder, D. M. Layton, was elected, and also another deacon, J. S. Craig.

The same paper states that on Sabbath, November 21, Messrs. John H. Sillings, John H. Jones, Rudolph McGlamery and James H. Fauver, were ordained and installed ruling elders of Union church, Lexington Presbytery.

Items from the Christian Observer:

Rev. James H. Morrison, pastor of the Portland Avenue church, in this city has been doing a good deal of missionary work in Nelson county, Ky. And as a part of the fruits of his labors at his last visit to New Haven, on the 21st of November, he had the pleasure of welcoming four members into the church—two by letter and two on profession of faith. Three were heads of families.

The Rev. Ben. Helm, on Sabbath, 28th ult., was installed pastor of the church, at Carrollton, Ky. Rev. Thomas Converse presided and preached the sermon. Rev. E. W. Bedinger delivered the charge to the pastor, and Rev. Angus McDonald the charge to the people. Mr. McDonald remained there to preach for several days.

Five additions to the church at Richwood, Ky. Rev. Mr. McElroy has been assisting the pastor.

Maj. Robert Bingham, of Mebaneville, N. C., advises the Observer that he has control of $300 a year to be expended in paying the board of candidates for the ministry while preparing for college at Bingham school. In using this it is proposed to lend a candidate $65 per year, and take his note for the same, payable with the first money he shall make, which $65 will pay his board for a year in a successful messing club.

Items from St. Louis Presbyterian:

The McKendree church at Nashville, Tenn., was lately struck by lightning. There does not appear to have been much damage done.

Rev. J. B. Lorance writes us:

A meeting of six days' continuance was closed in the Presbyterian church, Courtland, Ala., on November 23d, in which Rev. J. W. Hoyte, D. D., assisted the pastor, preaching with great earnestness, tenderness and power. The church has been greatly refreshed; wanderers from the fold have been reclaimed, and sinners regenerated. Of the younger members of the church who had drifted into worldliness, twenty appeared before the session and renewed their allegiance to Christ. Nine have been received into the church on confession of their faith; while two others preferred to unite with another church.

Rev. W. E. Burke, now of Prescott, Ark., has been invited by the Augusta church, in the Presbytery of Missouri, which he formerly served once a month, to return and give them half his time. Arrangements can readily be made to employ the rest of his time in neighboring churches. We shall be sorry for our Arkansas friends, if they lose this excellent minister; but Missouri will heartily welcome his return.

Rev. Dr. Robertson has recently held several days' meeting at the long vacant Augusta church. One person was received on examination, and the church was revived to desire and to make provision for stated preaching.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The Princeton Review. November and December, 1880. $2.00 a year. 37 Park Row, New York.

Contents. 1. The Ultimate Design of man. Prof. Godet, Switzerland. 2. How Congress and the Public deal with a Great Revenue and Industrial Problem, Hon. D. A. Wells. 3. The Sabbath Question. President Seely. 4. Agnosticism in Kant, Prof. Ormond. 5. Antiquity of Man and the Origin of Species. Principal Dawson. 6. The Historical Proofs of Christianity, Prof. G. P. Fisher. 6. Criteria of the Various Kinds of Truth, President McCosh.

This sixth imposing number closes the 56th year of this Review, giving a total of over 900 octavo pages. The value of the whole year's issue may be partially estimated by recalling a few names of distinguished scholars, other than those mentioned above, who have contributed articles. From Great Britain: Prof. Rogers and Canon G. Rawlinson, of Oxford; Prof. H. Calderwood and Sir Alex. Grant, of Edinburgh; Principal Shairp, of St. Andrews, and Principal Dawson, of Canada. Then we have our own Presidents Porter and Bartlett; Professors F. L. Patton, R. L. Dabney, P. Schaff, Bowen, Geo. Fisher, March, Wharton, &c., a galaxy indeed of able men, who have something to say, and therefore write. It is the cheapest Review, moreover, now published.

St. Nicholas for December has been received. The "Christmas" number is elegantly illustrated and has some very fine articles for the boys and girls. It is specially gotten up for the Christmas holiday and tells you all about camping out, &c. Price 30 cents or $3 00 a year. Scribner & Co., 743 Broadway, N. Y.

The Missionary Herald. December. $1.10 per annum. Boston, Mass.

This in the interesting organ of the American Board of Correspondents of Foreign Missions. Their regular work demands from current receipts for the years 1880–1881, $500,000. The number is replete with interesting discussions and facts.

North Carolina Medical Journal. Fine—very fine. An unprofessional mans kips the hard words and finds brain employment for all his spare time—but the North Carolina Medical Journal for Physicians forever. $3.00 a year.

But here's "Uncle Remus"—and now we are getting down to our taste. Mr. Harris knows all about it. Old "Uncle Remus" looks wondrous natural, and we are carried back to the days when we stole away to the washhouse to hear "Uncle Simon" tell about Brer Fox and Brer Alligator. Queer taste, maybe, but as the wrinkles increase and the hair grows white, we love to go back to those early days, and the Folk-Lore of the Old Plantation takes us there. A bow to D. Appleton & Co., for this.

MRS. MARY DICKSON.

The announcement last week of the death of this estimable christian lady carried sorrow to the hearts of many friends. She was the daughter of Neill and Jane McLaurin of Wilmington, in which city she was born February 18th, 1825. She was united in marriage to Dr. Robert Dickson, October 27th, 1845 In 1846 she made a public profession of her faith in Christ by connecting herself with Centre church, within whose bounds she was residing. Afterwards, upon removing to what is now Laurinburgh, at that time within the bounds of Laurel Hill congregation, she transferred her membership to the latter church. When Laurinburgh church was organized she removed her membership to that church, where it remained until her death, which took place November 28th. Thus although the whole of her married life was passed within three miles of the place to which she first moved with her husband, yet as she crossed the bounds of one congregation into those of another, she took her church membership with her and fell in cordially with the church within whose bounds she lived.

Mrs. Dickson loved her Church, and was steadfast in her adherence to its doctrines and polity, as one who was sure that these are according to the pattern shown in the Mount. She was a well-informed christian, and ready to give a reason for the faith that was in her. Her intellect was strong and sprightly, and her memory retentive. She was a great reader, and her information was extensive and varied. She was an exemplary Christian, affectionate and kind to all, modest and unassuming, conscientious and unaffected. She was "made perfect through suffering." For some years she was afflicted, and at times her sufferings were great. But she was an uncomplaining sufferer, and endured with patience, looking at the things which are unseen and eternal. Her last illness, though protracted, was almost entirely free from pain. Her strength gradually failed, and when the hour came, without a struggle and with hardly a twitch of a muscle or a nerve, she sweetly fell asleep in Jesus. The Lord came and took her to be with Him where He is. Her removal has left a void in many hearts. But there is one, her companion for thirty five years, to whom she was the devoted, dutiful, affectionate wife, on whom it falls with crushing weight. May He who is the Author of all good as the Source of all consolation and hope, support and comfort him. COM.

At Rockfish Village, Cumberland county, N. C., on the 29th ult, WILLIE HERBERT DENBY, infant son of Dr. J. W. and Minnie Denby, aged 18 months and 9 days.

"It is well with the child." J. P. M.

At his residence, near Burgaw, Pender county, N. C., of dropsy, on the 21st inst, Mr. LEWIS SANDERS, aged 85 years.

Deceased was an honored member of Hopewell Presbyterian church, which he faithfully served as ruling elder for a number of years, and while his removal from us will be deeply felt by the Church, family and friends, we are constrained to "count our loss his eternal gain. Of him, we think, it can be truthfully said: "Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom there is no guile!"

On the 19th inst, near Black River chapel, in Pender county, Mrs. JANNET CORBETT, relict of the late John Corbett, aged 86 years and 3 months.

The deceased was a member of Black River chapel for more than a half century, and had the confidence and respect of the membership as a faithful disciple who tried to fill the measure of her duty in an humble and quiet way. She sought no distinctions, nor did she grieve the brotherhood by any unseemly forwardness in her speech and demeanor. Her's was a gentle spirit, that loved and found the pleasant ways, the paths of peace. Her physical sufferings, which were protracted and severe in her latter days, were borne with commendable patience and fortitude. Her complaints were few and faith conspicuous, looking for and earnestly desiring to be clothed with the righteousness of her Saviour. Her last days were seasons of prayer and thanksgiving to God for His great mercies to her in health, in sickness and in the close of her earthly career. A tender and affectionate mother, a true friend, a kind neighbor and an humble Christian, is a fit tablet to her memory.

"The righteous are had in everlasting remembrance." A FRIEND

Copies and imitations are acknowledgements of the superior merit and excellence of the genuine article. Worthy and valuable articles are what the frauds are committed against, and it is a proof of high estimation, very flattering to the originators, but very dangerous and unprofitable to the consumer and demoralizing to the dealer. Beware of counterfeits and see that you only get the genuine Simmons Liver Regulator, in white wrapper, with the Z on the face and signature on side of J. H. Zeilin & Co., who have stopped five different practical imitators of this valuable medicine by injunction of law, but still other frauds are in the market, as rascals are not yet all hung.

The people have been so much imposed upon by worthless Blood Purifiers, that we are glad to be able to recommend a preparation which can be depended on as containing invaluable medicinal virtues, and is worthy of the public confidence. Arousing its Readers.

An alarm of fire at midnight is a startling thing, but not half so startling to many who hear it as would be the sudden knowledge of their own dangerous physical condition. Thousands of thousands are hurrying to their graves because they are carelessly indifferent to the insidious inroads of disease and the means of cure. It is the mission of H. H. Warner & Co., with their Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, to arouse men to a sense of their danger and then cure them.—Memphis Appeal.

Messrs. ANSON D. F. RANDOLPH & CO, have arranged with Messrs. STRAHAN & CO., *of London, for an edition of their sumptuous edition of the Pilgrim's Progress. Little Blue Jacket.

"My grandfather's clock was too long the shelf,
So it stood ninety years on the floor."

sang a small piping voice, in broken English nearly drowned by the harsh notes of a hand organ.

"Mamma, come look! There is a little boy, a monkey and a man with an organ." And Sulvie's mamma went to the window to see the little boy whose childish voice was now repeating the chorus—

"Never to go again, when the old man died."

There stood the group, the man evidently a native of fair Italy grinding out at rapid speed the discordant notes of the organ, gliding without pause from "My Grandfather's Clock" to "Pop goes the Weasel," the monkey dancing to the gay tune, while the boy sang in breathless haste the foolish words:

"The priest he kissed the cobbler's wife.
Pop goes the Weasel."

The young minstrel was dressed in an old, ragged suit of blue, his pinched face wearing a haggard look such as no innocent child of nine or ten should ever have. "Poor little Blue Jacket!" said Mrs. Marsh. "Here Sulvie; give him these pennies, and ask him whether he wants something to eat." "Thankee, me no wants nothing to eat."

The man smiled a grim smile, and struck up another tune, the monkey in his grave fashion waltzing around the pavement among the crowd of children, who always miraculously congregate around an organ and monkey.

"Mamma, he did look hungry, didn't he?" said Sulvie.

"Yes," answered Mrs. Marsh, "and I fear he was afraid to say so before the man."

Little Blue Jacket came often before the window and sang, always saying, "Me no hungry," as he looked askance at the man; and once while the man had turned his head to jerk the monkey back from the middle of the street, Blue Jacket took a piece of cake from Sulvie and hastily put it in his pocket.

One evening, late in the fall, when winter gives us warning of his approach by violent gusts of northeast winds, that howl and sigh like weird spirit, while the rain dashes against the window-panes and pours on the roof, making wild, sad music to those comfortably housed—and God alone knows how sad to those homeless ones who rove the streets of our crowded cities—there was a timid ring at Mrs. Marsh's front door-bell, hardly noticed at first amid the noise of the storm. Then a louder peal, followed by the exclamation of the family, "Why, who can that be such a night?"

The door was opened, and there stood a little drenched figure, hatless and shoeless.

"Why, little Blue Jacket what do you want?" asked Mrs. Marsh.

Let me in please. Please send me no way. He get me if you do;" the tears and sobs of the boy being dreadful to witness.

Taking him by the hand, Mrs. Marsh led him into the sitting-room, where the bright gaslight and cheerful fire made a pleasant picture.

"Who is this?" inquired Mr. Marsh.

"O, papa!" exclaimed Sulvie "it is little Blue Jacket. Don't you know I have so often told you about him?"

Blue Jacket had crouched near the fire and was crying piteously.

"Come, my boy, tell us what is the matter," said Mr. Marsh in his kindest tones.

"Don't send me away. Me will die. He so bad, he beat me so hard." And the old torn and soaking wet blue jacket was thrown open disclosing the skin, all scarred and red and purple from whipping.

Tears filled the eyes of the kind family, and Mrs. Marsh went up-stairs and got a suit of clothes which had belonged to her little boy Frank, who several months before had left his earthly home to dwell with God in the heavenly home above. Blue Jacket was soon arrayed in the clean, neat suit; and a nice, warm supper was eaten by the half-starved child. The tears and sobs ceased, and smiles lit up the pinched face.

"Now, Blue Jacket, tell us what has happened, and what brought you here to-night in such a storm?"

The child looked around in a scared, nervous way as though fearful some one he was afraid of would hear his story. "He beat me bad. Me lost a penny one lady gave me—he often do so—and me so hungry and tired, and he make me tell people me no want to eat. He beat poor Jocko, too—he the monkey—and he tired too, and no want to dance. And me run away and come here. You kind to me; ask me to eat when me sings in the street. Me like you"—looking at Mrs. Marsh—"you like my mother in Italy. She die, and me come over the water with the man and the organ. He whips me so much." And again the sobs burst forth.

Blue Jacket was put in a warm bed and tucked in by Mrs. Marsh, whose motherly heart was touched by the friendless boy. He told them next morning where the wretched hovel he called home was. Mr. Marsh went there to see what he could learn of the man, and whether the tale of Blue Jacket, whose real name was Givo Lugi, was true. The man was gone and nothing could be heard of him.

A consultation was held as to what was to be done with Blue Jacket. It was thought best to put him in the Home for the Friendless, where he would be educated and well taken care of. He is a bright little fellow; so the matron tells his kind friends, the Marshes. Once in awhile he is permitted to visit them, and he is so contented and full of glee, and tells Mrs. Marsh confidently he means to be a good man just like Mr. Marsh, and will do all he can for boys and monkeys who have to travel around with bad men who play on organs.—Christian at Work.

Bessemer Steel.

"Here is a conundrum for you, boys," said Herbert. "What is the most valuable thing in the world?"

"Ho," said Oscar, "that's easy enough, everybody knows that gold is."

"No," said Herbert, shaking his head; "it is not gold. Try again."

"Is it iron?" asked John.

"Yes," replied Herbert, "I suppose that iron, if we included all the various kinds, such as wrought iron, cast iron, and steel, is of more value than any one thing in the world."

This conversation took place on the platform of a railway car just leaving the city of Pittsburg. The speakers were Mr. Herbert Wallaston, his cousin John, who was about twelve years old, and a friend of John's called Oscar. Mr. Wallaston had just graduated at a scientific school and now he took great pleasure in showing and teaching John all he could about the curious facts of science, in their various walks and excursions. At present they had just left Pittsburg on an expedition to the little town of Bessemer to see the great steel works.

"Now," said Herbert, "while we are riding along, you shall be the audience and I shall be the Professor, and will give you a lecture on iron."

"That's good," said Oscar, "I should like it ever so much."

"Ladies and gentlemen," began Herbert.—

"But there are no ladies," said Oscar.

"Hush!" replied Herbert, "you must not interrupt the lecturer; besides, that is the way they always begin."

"Iron is a metal; it is one of the strongest metals that there is. A bar so big round"—here Herbert held up his finger in the form of a circle about an inch and a half in diameter—"will hold 50,000 pounds. You can form some idea of this enormous weight if you imagine twenty-five coal carts tied together and hung on to a bar this size."

"My!" said Oscar, in a low tone, "what a string of carts. I should think the horses would kick."

"If," continued Herbert, "you put the iron into a furnace with some coal and heat it very hot it will melt, and then by pouring it into a mold it may be cast into any shape you please."

"Just as we cast some lead bullets the other day?" asked John.

"Yes," answered Herbert, "just like that. When the iron is melted in the furnace," he continued, "it absorbs part of the coal."—

"How does it do that?" asked Oscar.

"No one knows exactly how," said Herbert; "but this coal has a peculiar effect, and makes the iron brittle."

"Yes," said John, "I tried to use the stove cover the other day for a hammer and broke it."

"Ah," replied Herbert, "if breaking a stove cover will teach you that cast iron is brittle it will be a very cheap way of learning an important fact. Steel is made from iron by taking a part of this coal, or carbon, as it is scientifically called, out of the iron."

"But," said Oscar, "you said that the carbon made the iron brittle, and steel is very strong."

"True," replied Herbert, "a good deal of carbon does make the iron brittle; but if we take some of it out, and leave only a very little, it makes a compound which is very strong, and this we call steel."

"I don't understand that," said Oscar.

"No," answered Herbert, "no one understands it; they only know that this is a fact. About twelve or fifteen years ago an English gentleman named Mr. Bessemer discovered that by melting the iron, and then blowing air into it, the air would burn the carbon out: and by carefully watching the process they could find out just when to stop the air in order to leave the right amount of carbon for the steel."

"And is this kind of steel, made by blowing air into metal iron, what they call 'Bessemer steel'?" asked John.

"Yes," said Herbert, "and a great improvement it is. In this way they can make several tons of steel in a few minutes by blowing air into the iron just as it comes from the blast-furnace, where it is made from the ore; while by the old ways it would take a good many days."

"I should think they would use steel for almost everything now," said John.

"It is being used a great deal," continued Herbert. "Almost all the rails for the railroads are now made from steel. In France there have been a number of large ships made entirely from it. At St Louis one of the largest bridges in America is built of various kinds of steel, and it is expected to be used in the great East River Bridge now being constructed between New York and Brooklyn. It is very probable that before long steel will take the place of iron to a large extent. But here we are at the station, and so I must end my lecture."—Christian Union.

Eastern North Carolina.

DOUBLE CROP FARMING 1880.

As considerable interest has been manifested in our four acre experimental farm, near Newbern, North Carolina, which has been planted for several years in Garden Peas and Cotton, we give below a statement of the cost and results for the present year:

The land was ploughed early in January, and there were applied about two hundred cart loads of compost, made from swamp muck, stable manure, and four tons cotton seed;
Which cost, delivered on the land,	$ 75
On the 16th Jan. we planted eight bushels Extra Early Peas, cost	48
The crop of Peas was picked from April 6th to 19th, when the vines were cut and cured for forage.
On the 1st May we drilled 200 lbs. Super Phosphate and 200 lbs. Land Plaster per acre, costing	26
And planted six bushels Extra Early Cluster Cotton Seed, costing	18
The cost of labor for planting and cultivating the four acres we estimate at about	50
Cost of boxes and packing peas	75
Cost of picking, ginning and bailing the cotton	63
Rent of land, 4 acres, $15 per acre,	60
Total cost,	$415

RESULTS.

Our net sales of peas in April, in New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore, after deducting freight and commission,	596
Four tons pea vine forage	40
Six bales cotton weighing 2700 lbs. or 675 lint per acre, sold in Newbern for	276
The seed are of extra quality, and will be sold at one dollar per bushel, about	125
Total sales	$1037
Deduct cost as above,	415
Net profit	$622

The above statement is practically correct, and is taken from our ledger account. This is profitable farming and proves that good seed and manuring will pay. Several of our truck farmers did nearly or quite as well on their pea crops, but did not equal us on the cotton crop.

The rent allowed for this land is not a sample of prices, as land equally as good, a short distance from town, can be purchased for half the money, or it can be rented from two to four dollars per acre.

The Manufacture of Panama Hats.

Panama hats are principally manufactured in Veraquas and western Panama. Not all, however, known to commerce by that name are plaited in the Isthmus, by far a greater proportion being made in Manta, Monte Christi and other parts of Ecuador. The hats are worn almost in the whole American continent and the West Indies, and would be equally used in Europe did not their high price (varying from $2 to $150) prevent their importation. They are distinguished from all others by consisting of only a single piece, and by their lightness and flexibility. They may be rolled up and put into the pocket without injury. In the rainy season they are apt to get black, but by washing with soap and water, besmearing them with lime juice, or any other acid, and exposing them to the sun, their whiteness is easily restored.

So little is known about these hats that it may not be out of place to give an account of their manufacture. The "straw" (paja), previous to plaiting, has to undergo several processes. The leaves are gathered before they unfold, all their ribs and coarser veins removed, and the rest, without being separated from the base of the leaves, is reduced to shreds. After having been exposed to the sun for a day or two, and tied into a knot, the straw is immersed in boiling water until it becomes white. It is then hung up in a shady place and subsequently bleached for a day or two. The straw is now ready for use, and in this state is sent to different places, especially to Peru, where the Indians manufacture from it those beautiful cigar cases which sometimes bring as high as $30 each. The plaiting of the hats is very troublesome. It commences at the crown and finishes at the brim. The hats are made on a block, which is placed upon the knees and requires to be constantly pressed with the breast. According to their quality, more or less time is occupied in their completion—the coarser ones may be finished in two or three days, while the finest may take as many months. The best times for plaiting are the morning hours and the rainy season, when the air is moist. In the middle of the day and in dry, clear weather the straw is apt to break, and this, when the hat is finished, is betrayed by knots and much diminishes the value.—Journal of Botany

Sketches of Famous Persons.

ELIZABETH OF AUSTRIA.

Elizabeth, Empress of Austria, is one of the most cultivated sovereigns in the world. She draws beautifully, is a good musician, and speaks fluently all the languages of modern Europe. She is fond of literature, and among her attendants has readers in various languages, to whom she enjoys listening. She is not very popular, it is said, among the ladies of the court circle, since she has no taste for small chatter and fashionable amusements. She amuses herself with her sewing, embroidery, riding, and last but not least, in playing with her little daughter, Valerie, for whom she has an almost idolatrous affection.

HENRI ROCHEFORT.

Between the Henri Rochefort of the Empire and the Henri Rochefort of to-day there is little resemblance. He used to have angular features and frizzly hair; he has now filled out and has become almost fat. His external appearance is more correct, and almost fashionable. He wears a light paletot over a black frock coat and trousers, a lustrous silk hat and gray gloves. His hair is now cut close, and the famous tuft has been sacrificed. Even the imperial has disappeared from the chin. The complexion is tanned, and the face in becoming fuller has caused the prominence of the cheek-bones to disappear. The eye has also lost its brilliancy and limpidity. The legendary Rochefort has in fact disappeared.

GLADSTONE

The British Premier is thus described as he was in 1838, at the age of 29, "the most rising young man on the Tory side of the House:"

"Mr. Gladstone's appearance and manners are much in his favor. He is a fine looking man. He is about the usual height, and of good figure. His countenance is mild and pleasant, and has a highly intellectual expression. His eyebrows are dark and rather prominent. There is not a dandy in the House but envies what Truefit would call 'his fine head of jet black hair.' It is always parted from the crown downward to his brow, where it is tastefully shaded. His features are small and regular, and his complexion must be a very unworthy witness if he does not possess an abundant stock of health."

The same writer goes on to say: "His style is polished, but has no appearance of the effect of previous preparation. He displays considerable acuteness in replying to an opponent: he is quick in his perception of anything vulnerable in the speech to which he replies, and happy in laying the weak point bare to the gaze of the House. He now and then indulges in sarcasm, which is in most cases very felicitous. He is plausible when most in error. When it suits him or his party he can apply himself with the strictest closeness to the real point at issue; when to evade the point is deemed most politic, no man can wander from it more widely."

A few years since in describing the personnel of the Gladstone Government one thus writes of the Premier: "When Mr. Gladstone first entered the House of Commons, in the heyday of youth, his looks earned for him the sobriquet of 'Handsome Gladstone.' The handsome looks are gone, but it is a noble face for all that—a nobler countenance than it was then in its early bloom and freshness. Lined with thought; paled by years of toil; the dark hair thinned, the dark eyes cavernod under brows habitually contracted—it is essentially the face of a senator, one of the Patres Conscripti. And there are subtle traits of character, readily enough discernible at a glance, by those who care to look for them, subtle though they are in those nervous lineaments; a blending of generosity and scorn in the play of the nostrils, an alternating severity and sweetness in the play of the mobile mouth. It is a face betraying every emotion, concealing nothing—incapable of concealment. We speak of this as of something not by any means to a debater's, and still less to a party leader's advantage. It is a very considerable and perpetual disadvantage to Mr. Gladstone. He 'wears his heart upon his sleeve for daws to peck at.' He will visibly writhe under an ungenerous taunt when it is being uttered. His visage darkens with indignation while his adversary is yet speaking."

STATE NEWS.

For the benefit of the members of the company the Iredell Blues have established a reading room, which they propose to furnish with a library of choice literature.—Statesville Landmark.

We were shown by Mr. J. C. Bates, a few days ago, a nice bar of gold which was taken from the Washington mine, now being operated by Mr. Bates. The bar referred to was the result of only a few days' work, and was worth some three hundred dollars.—Monroe Enquirer.

David Alexander, of Tyrrell, planted a gallon of rice on a quarter of an acre this past season, and gathered and measured twenty bushels of rough rice.—Elizabeth City Economist.

There will be enough rough rice raised this year in the counties of Hyde, Tyrrell, Perquimans, Pasquotank, Camden and Currituck to give constant employment to a first-class rice mill.—Elizabeth City Economist.

Mr. Worth, the very clever superintendent of the fish hatchery of this place, returned to his post several weeks ago, and the hatching of the fish is now in full blast. A great many thousand salmon have been hatched and turned loose in the Catawba river near here within the past few weeks. Mr. Worth is now hatching several new species; among others is the carp, a fish imported to this country from Germany.—Morganton Blade.

Two young men living about fifteen miles from Davidson College, rocked a colored train hand on the Statesville road recently, and on the 17th were brought here, tried and convicted for the offence. Each were fined $50.—Charlotte Home.

Mr. D. C. Stanley, who lives on Bushy Mountain, N. C., and is widely known in Baltimore, has made a lucky shot with his trusty rifle. He killed on Monday a bald eagle, which was a monster bird. It measured 13 feet from tip to tip, 7 inches between the front and rear toe, had talons 2 inches long, and weighed over 40 pounds.—Farmer and Mechanic.

The Chicago Times says: Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure is highly endorsed by ministers, judges, physicians, surgeons; by men of literary and scholarly distinction, and by individuals in all the walks of life.

Ague Cure

Is a purely vegetable bitter and powerful tonic, and is warranted a speedy and certain cure for Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Intermittent or Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, and all malarial disorders. In miasmatic districts, the rapid pulse, coated tongue, thirst, lassitude, loss of appetite, pain in the back and loins, and coldness of the spine and extremities, are only premonitions of severer symptoms, which terminate in the ague paroxysm, succeeded by high fever and profuse perspiration.

It is a startling fact, that quinine, arsenic and other poisonous minerals, form the basis of most of the "Fever and Ague Preparations," "Specifics," "Syrups," and "Tonics," in the market. The preparations made from these mineral poisons, although they are palatable, and may break the chill, do not cure, but leave the malarial and their own drug poison in the system, producing quinism, dizziness, ringing in the ears, headache, vertigo, and other disorders more formidable than the disease they were intended to cure. AYER'S AGUE CURE thoroughly eradicates these noxious poisons from the system, and always cures the severest cases. It contains no quinine, mineral, or any thing that could injure the most delicate patient; and its crowning excellence, above its certainty to cure, is that it leaves the system as free from disease as before the attack.

For Liver Complaints, AYER'S AGUE CURE, by direct action on the liver and biliary apparatus, drives out the poisons which produce these complaints, and stimulates the system to a vigorous, healthy condition.

We warrant it when taken according to directions.

NASAL CATARRH!

All cases promptly and permanently cured by
Dr. S. W. BEALL,
Homeopathic Catarrhal Specialist,
A reputable Physician of 30 years' practice.
Not a Douche, Not an Inhaler, Not a Snuff.

Chronic Nasal Catarrh has never been cured by local treatment alone. Catarrh being constitutional requires constitutional treatment to eradicate it from the system.

In connection with Dr. Beall's Nasal Catarrh Specific, a course of treatment is furnished each patient as indicated by the symptoms. Also an Atomizer with cleansing solutions to be locally applied in the form of a spray. Patients at a distance treated by the aid of a carefully prepared diagnostic sheet. No single box or bottle of medicine is applicable to all cases.

Dr. Beall has cured hundreds of cases in its worst form, and patients now being treated in all parts of the United States report rapid improvement. Treatment is pleasant and directions easily followed.

The following is a specimen of the testimonials constantly being received:

To the Public—Statement of A. W. Essex, of the firm of Essex & Harler, Troy, Ohio.

For a number of years I was afflicted with Nasal Catarrh, affecting seriously both my head and throat. The discharges from the nose were streaked with blood, and had a very offensive smell. After a course of treatment from Dr. Beall, I am entirely cured. A. W. ESSEX.

Extract from a Home Endorsement.

"Dr. Beall offers to the public no quack nostrum, and parties can rest assured that humbuggery has no place in the treatment proposed.

The fact that already about 70,000 Cabinet or Parlor Organs are yearly sold in the United States (nearly twice as many as of piano-fortes) attests their growing popularity.

THE FINER DRAWING ROOM STYLES.
MASON & HAMLIN
CABINET ORGANS.

Comparatively few musicians, even, have kept pace with recent improvements in reed instruments and are fully aware of the excellence now attained in the finer styles, in the manufacture of which the Mason & Hamlin Organ Co. are quite unrivaled. These styles must not be judged by the small organ so largely sold; which they greatly excel. It is principally these finer styles which have won for the Mason & Hamlin Organs the extraordinary distinctions awarded them at EVERY GREAT WORLD'S INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION AND COMPARISON OF THE BEST PRODUCTIONS OF ALL NATIONS FOR THIRTEEN YEARS; being the only highest awards to any American organs at any one. It is one of these which led Dr. FRANZ LISZT to characterize the Mason & Hamlin Organs not only as "matchless," but as "unrivaled," and which led the distinguished OTTO XANWENKA, of Berlin, to declare them "the most excellent of instruments," adding: "They are capable of giving the finest tone coloring, and no other instrument so enraptures the player." THEODORE THOMAS testifies that musicians generally rank these organs very high, far above all others, in which opinion he himself fully concurs. OLE BULL found them so superior as to draw from him the declaration that "Their fine quality of tone is in contrast with that of other reed organs." The distinguished tenor, ITALO CAMPANINI, in a note to the manufacturers, as he was about leaving this country recently, wrote: "Having had opportunity to observe and use your organs, while singing in your country, I take pleasure in testifying to their admirable qualities. They excel all similar instruments of which I have any knowledge. But you have better proof of my opinion of them than even this expression, in the fact that I have just purchased one to take with me to Italy." Hundreds of similar opinions from distinguished musicians have accumulated in the hands of the manufacturers.

A recent beautiful invention which the Mason & Hamlin Co. are now introducing, greatly improves the key action of such instruments, lightening the touch, heretofore difficult when many stops were used, one-half, and still more improving it in other respects.

THE FINER DRAWING ROOM STYLES of the Mason & Hamlin Organs are furnished in cases of BLACK WALNUT, MAHOGANY, ASH and EBONIZED, plain to very elegant, some with pipe organ tops. They have from THIRTEEN to TWENTY-THREE STOPS; some with TWO MANUALS and FULL PEDAL BASE. NET PRICES are from $200 to $[illegible].

The Mason & Hamlin Co. also manufacture a variety of styles of fine organs for churches where greatest power as well as variety is required; they also regularly make a large variety of small organs from $51 up; all of which are of very highest excellence. Organs are furnished for monthly or quarterly payments, $5 and upwards.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE, 32 pp., 4to, with prices and circulars containing much useful information, sent free.

It is especially invite all persons taking any interest in such matters to visit our warerooms and examine these organs. It is always a pleasure to exhibit them.

EXTRACTS FROM A YOUNG LADY'S LETTERS HOME.

NEW YORK, November 8 1880.

Yesterday Miss L and I walked up Madison avenue to Dr. Tyng's church on Forty second street. The day was bright and cool, and the beautiful houses and buildings on this elegant street appeared to the best advantage. The sidewalks were thronged with handsomely dressed people. The Church of the Holy Trinity is built of tiled brick, with stone facings, square tower and open arcades, stained glass windows in three different rows. The room is a semi-ellipse, the chancel a semi-hexigon, and the arched and painted recess behind is semi-octagonal. Above the arch are the words, "The testimony of Jesus is the Spirit of prophecy;" and a verse is on each of the three windows in the recess. There were four ministers to assist Dr. Tyng, as it it was a communion occasion. A good part of the morning service was omitted. Dr Tyng's sermon was addressed to worldly Christians, from the text—"For we are comforts far as to you also in preaching the Gospel." The whole discourse was extremely interesting. Dr. Tyng has the same liveliness of address that Talmage has, but shows more refinement. Has a fine clear voice and a much better manner (more impressive), than most Episcopal preachers that I have heard. * * * He began by saying: "Corinth is but another name in the vocabulary of the world's votaries for culture, and even as far as unto them the Apostle's challenge comes." * * * Pointing out their inconsistencies he said: "Many who are eager to cast a stone at a fallen woman will countenance the same vice in another where genius and art are joined with it," &c. (This referred to Bernhardt and the reception given her here. I am told that many sermons are directed against her from the city pulpits.) "In the generation just passed away, every Christian home was a theological seminary where the children were trained to fear God. Now we find interest in the milliner's show room, and conversation led by the dress-maker."

Towards the close, he rose into eloquence: "And to you who are far distant from the land of peace and happiness where the believer dwells, I will say there is no other name under heaven whereby you can be saved but the Lord Jesus Christ's; there is no other Moses to show you the promised land; there is no other Joshua to lead you over into the land flowing with milk and honey; there is no other David to establish a throne of elevation and righteousness; no other Isaiah to lead you to lofty and noble aspirations. Ye who submit to the yoke of the Nazarine do but follow the crowd of saints around the throne:—

Go ask them whence their victory came,
They with united breath
Ascribe their conquest to the Lamb,
Their triumph to His death

After the sermon, a great crowd remained to the communion, and Dr. Tyng's invitation to "all disciples to come to the Master's table" was so cordial that we felt constrained to stay. Every part of the ceremony was so beautifully arranged, with such order, such solemnity and silence, broken only by the voice of the officiating minister. * * * At night we heard Dr. Deems.

NOVEMBER 10th.

Last Monday night we were at the Brooklyn Tabernacle, attending a great Sunday school meeting. This is Dr. Taylor's church: elegantly adorned with blue and gold, and beautifully lit up and crowded. Most of the great city preachers were there. Dr. Hall, with his rich voice and fluent utterance, was chairman, and opened the meeting with a first-rate address, chiefly about the Sunday school meeting in Belfast, Ireland, last summer. He said many first-rate things in support of the Sunday school as an institution, and of the international lessons.

Dr. Taylor's was the principal address of the evening, as he was delegate from America to the Sunday School Centennial in London last summer, and had much to tell. He described the meetings there. He deplored the want of Christian fellowship with the Church of England: "I who have so long breathed the purer air of American freedom felt pained to see that the children belonging to the Sunday schools of the Established Church were entirely separated from those of the other schools. The latter held their celebration in the Crystal Palace, while none but the children of the schools of the Church of England were held worthy to be admitted to the open air festival presided over by the Archbishop of Canterbury. They need some one to cry 'Shame! shame!' and none could do this more appropriately than I, for the errors of my native land touch me deeply. I do cry shame! for I tell them the Sunday school is greater than the Archbishop of Canterbury—aye greater than the Queen on her throne, for it is God's work." He spoke next of the Sunday school as first established by Robert Raikes. The teachers were paid, and this threatened the ruin of the whole scheme. "When a band of eight young men (and God above knows how much young men have done for His Church) came forward, introducing the system of voluntary teaching, and from that time the work has gone forward triumphantly for one hundred years. The seed scattered first in England, has been carried far and wide, and its harvest is waving now in every land."

He spoke of Sunday school libraries, and deplored the novellettes admitted to them; said he did not object to fiction if it was true; defined the difference between truth and fact, when the audience smiled at the idea of true fiction.

Dr. Hall spoke of the want of preaching designed especially for the young, and made attractive to them; that young people will not come out unless they feel and know there will be something for them especially. * * * When we got home our escorts came in and staid and staid. In this matter I confess I discern but little difference between North and South.

NOVEMBER 18th.

Nothing gives you so much interest in your Church and its services as working for it. I am so thankful for the little I have been able to do for mine at home. I know there were times when I was reluctant to go on with it—be always there, be punctual, and feel compelled to do it. But now the familiarity with our service and our hymns is just invaluable to me. I am at home in every church here. Our hymns are so often sung: our familiar tunes seem popular here. How I do enjoy them. How dear and home-like even these splendid city churches are. They all seem one to me, though of course my own seems nearest.

I am going to send you a specimen of my "Keramics" by Thanksgiving day. I find the work just as fascinating as all painting is, and am getting over the first difficulties. I have been painting some of the lovely autumn leaves you sent me—the dear North Carolina leaves. How I enjoyed showing them at "Cooper." These Northern girls had never seen a sweetgum leaf nor a tulip-tree; and as to those great, glossy "black-jacks," they didn't even know what they were! I don't believe they have any gum trees here at all. * * * We Southerner's don't half know what a glorious country we have got; don't know half our advantages and blessings, and how much we have to be proud of and thankful for.

NOVEMBER 26th.

I went to Dr. Tyng's church for my Thanksgiving sermon, as it was conveniently near where I had been invited to eat my Thanksgiving dinner. The city was full of snow, but nobody minds snow or rain here. Dr. Tyng's sermon was a review of God's mercies to our country. It was a stimulating review. He read Dr. Franklin's excellent letter to the first Congress, recommending the appointment of a chaplain. The music was magnificent.

After the sermon we went into the basement of the building to see the church's "harvest home" for the poor. There were barrels and barrels of flour and potatoes and apples; long tables covered with uncooked hams and turkeys and ducks and chickens—with rice and sugar and coffee, and canned vegetables and fruits of all sorts. Such profuse bounty I never saw in my life. After prayer and singing these gifts were distributed. How many people went rejoicing out of that room. And I suppose every church in the city had just such a Thanksgiving: and yet so vast is New York, and so great the amount of wretchedness and want and sin and misery here, that all these lovely Christian charities are hardly sufficient to answer the demand.

NO WOMEN PREACHERS.

Most, if not all the Christian denominations of the country, unite in the American Tract Society, and no books are published which committees of these bodies do not agree to. In a note on 1 Tim. ii, 12, they say: "It is the revealed will of God that public religious teachers should be men, not women. He has allotted to them different spheres of action, and the perfection of each consists not in aspiring or submitting to occupy the place of the other, but in performing their own appropriate duties." The passage is, "but I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence.

The difference of a fast, from a feast, is that the latter has the eta (est), the Greek name of e in it. E. F. R.

THE LORD'S CALL.

Ebenezer (colored) Presbyterian church, in Newbern, N. C., was dedicated on Sabbath, November 7th, 1880. Three adults, two of whom were baptized, were received, and the Lord's Supper was celebrated. By special request of the Session, Rev. L. C. Vass, pastor of the 1st Presbyterian church, conducted an afternoon service, especially for the generous white citizens, who also made a dedication contribution.

This Church is in pretty gothic style, and has been built very cheaply. It is not entirely finished, being unpainted, inclosed by a rude fence and without a bell or communion service. But the congregation rejoices that it can be used with comfort. Lot and building have thus far cost over $1,600 and $1,150 have been collected and paid, leaving a balance due of $450 to $500. Leaving out what was receited from Newbern and the Sustentation Fund, the amount raised was contributed by twelve churches, (9 in North Carolina and 3 outside,) and about one hundred individual donors. If all who knew about this great work and felt kindly towards it, had only sent a small contribution of ONE DOLLAR, as requested, there would be no deficiency.

But there is a debt of over $450. All the energies of Ebenezer church are demanded for its current work; pastor's salary, &c. Will not those, who have shown their christian kindness already, and many others, sympathizing with this work for the Master among the colored people, just lend a helping hand now to set this colored church in a clear field for future service? Many willing hands and loving hearts make quick and easy work, in Jesus' name. Can you not spare a Christmas or New Year's gift to this cause? Will you not? Donations, large or small, may be sent to our Treasurer, REV. L. C. VASS, NEWBERN, N. C.

WORDS OF COUNSEL.

MR. EDITOR:—I do not think I shall find myself mistaken in supposing that the extract I send you with this, and such others as shall be sent, will not be unwelcome in the columns of your valuable paper.

They are words of counsel and kind of cheer written from time to time by one "who being dead yet speaketh;"

"Who found his doubts and gathered strength,
Who would not make his judgment blind,
Who faced the spectres of the wind
And laid them."

And they are so full of Christian faith and freshness, that it would seem almost of selfishness to withhold them from any whom they may aid in the Christian life. WAIF.

"You do right to look at all schemes possible for helping yourself; so far as that from being unbelief, that faith commands it.

Faith sees a duty, and straightway and gladly does it. Isn't that common sense? Which are you trying to walk by, faith or sight, when you are studying and praying to have Providence explained? Dear, you know that it is one of the Lord's favorite ways silently to make us do the duty at hand, and surprise us with the result? Don't waste life and fret your heart trying to understand, but frankly do what comes to be done.

"Do the little thou canst do,
And leave the rest to God."

"Do I believe that God lets us see why He puts us in just the place He chooses? No my dear. When He tells me "What I do Thou knowest not now;" when Paul says: I go bound in the Spirit into Jerusalem, not knowing the things that shall befall me there; when Isaiah says: "Verily, Thou art a God that keepest silence, &c," should I believe that He is going to tell me and explain all to me? The Lord hath said that He would dwell in the thick darkness. Amen! Amen!

"Even so Father for so it seemeth good in Thy sight"

* * * * *

As to the prophecies and the war. I understand all Daniel. I will Turkey whipped to death into Asia and finally, but I do not want Russia to partition Turkey around our great missionary station at Constantinople. It is impossible to do so. Turkish rule is too much. I am afraid it is impossible to expect so little of Russia. I have little confidence in politicians. As to the prophecies, "Never touch your horns against them" When [illegible] is sure not. But the Lord [illegible] right and [illegible] in the latter in advance that [illegible] eye.

* * * * *

Glad provided that indication of duty, I have come to consider [illegible] belief no [illegible] I believe I should [illegible] myself away. If anything less had brought me into my present situation.

* * * * *

We all condole with you in your trouble. But be sure to be cheerful. Do you know that cheerfulness is one of the cardinal virtues?

* * * * *

The word of command [illegible] order heard on the battle field is: "Close up the ranks," i. e.: let [illegible] draw nearer as shots and shell make gaps. That is just what we must do now, as death mows down so many that stood with us.

* * * * *

There is always less danger where duty is, and duty is to be learned by providential indications. Generally too, there is least danger where we are afraid.

THE SUNNY HOME.

I know of a room where sunshine lingers, and there is a breath of summer and mignonette in the air whenever I think of it. There a tired man comes home and throws off overcoat and hat without looking to see what becomes of them. There is a round table in the light, strewn with papers and magazines, woman's work, with a litter of rose leaves dropping over them from a central vase. There is a wide sofa, of the days of the Georges, fresh covered in chintz, with ferns and barebells for patterns, and a tired man goes down there with a great ruffled pillow under his shoulders, and opens parcels and letters dropping them on the floor—most natural place for them. A girl has been painting, and her water-colors and papers lie on a side table, just as she left them to rush for an impromptu ride. I have never been able to discover any disarrangement of the household economy by this flight. Somebody left a shawl on a chair. There will be nothing said about it at breakfast next morning. There are no laws here against playing with the curtain tassels, no regulations as to how often the snowy curtains may be put up or left down. They do not lose the season out, crisp and speckless as the neighbors do across the way, but the only consequence is they are oftenest new and clean. There is nothing very fine about this home, but things are renewed oftener and look brighter than they do in other houses. The chairs have no particular places, and anybody feels at liberty to draw the sofa out when it pleases him. There is no primness about the place. If there is grass on the lawn, it is meant to be walked on, and the geraniums are fondled and petted and caressed as if they were children. Do you know there is a magnetism in green leaves and growing flowers derived from the earth's heart, that makes it good to handle and feel them? This house is known as the place where one dares to breakfast. There is no ceremony of waiting. Coffee and cakes are put where they will be hot; the table is cleared to suit the housekeeper's convenience, and a small one set for the late comer.

Nobody lies awake at night till the light ceases to shine under your chamber door, if you want to sit up and read a volume through. There is an unwritten law of convenience for the household which regulates better than any Code Napoleonic. And the benefit of allowing people to be a law unto themselves is, that they are much better natured about it when they do obey. There is indulgence and repose in this lovely home, and a great deal of time for things which most people cut short: an hour's play with the children, "a right down" good chat with a neighbor, a day of letter-writing once a fortnight. Disorder does not imply dust or soil of any kind. It does not include shabbiness or mean chaos. It means "leave to be"—in most cases, thinking of people more than things. Order is simply harmony of a few notes. Disorder is the flowering, branching melody of one theme—and that theme, individuality.—Southern Churchman.

SUNRISE.

Now rests the world
In pure pearl colors folded;
Who are the frosts that gleam upon the grass,
And ghastly pale the mists that veil the valleys
In rank and file, like soldiers grim,
The trees loom thro' the shadows;
And over all, the soft gray skies
Bend in unbroken calm.
Soft and gray save where the uplands meet,
The tender lines where shadows melt,
The day spring's first fair blushes lie, and there
Into the silence faintly fall
The mellow tones of the early bells, and lo!
From behind the hills, with majestic port and slow,
Rises the red, red autumn sun. —Harper.

LIARS.

BY REV. DR. DEEMS.

We are growing too polite, to call things by their right names. We have softened "Grog-shops" into "Sample-Rooms," and those whom our blunt Saxon ancestors called "liars," we now designate as "persons who are conspicuously inexact." And the doom of those people, which is thus stated in our good old honest Bible, "All liars shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone," we euphemistically paraphrase into "All those who are conspicuously inexact shall go to a place of very torrid temperature."

To charge a man with being a liar, is to offer him the last possible indignity, because it lays at his door the most despicable of the crimes, a crime which involves total demoralization. There was a time when it resulted in a duel, and if a duel ought ever to be fought, it is upon such a charge. A man that is a liar deserves to be shot, if any man ever does. To make the charge is to attempt to do the man the greatest injury possible.

It is the most despicable of crimes because it is a coward, a knave and a fool. He is a coward because he does not dare to face the results of facts of his own creating. He is a knave because he attempts to gain ends by false pretences. He is a fool because he does not see that, if all men were liars, society would be hurled into a hell of anarchy.

There is no defence for it. It is not witty, nor wise, nor beautiful, nor profitable. Any blockhead can lie. A lie is a moral deformity. It has no counter-part in any reality. All nature and all the fixed facts of the universe conspire to fling a lie up to the surface and fling it out, as the bodily system makes a universal effort to eject poison. In the long run, the truth will come to be known and the lie exposed. In the long run, therefore, the lie is unprofitable.

There are polite liars, whom we smoothly call "diplomats," men whose paws are as velvet, but armed with claws like steel. They gain nothing by direct force of truth. Their whole brains are given to the study of circumvention. As soon as a man who is smoother and more patient comes along, their time of ruin comes.

There are liars of gossip, men and women, the only salt of whose discourse is falsehood, who scatter firebrands, arrows and death, and say, "Are we not in sport?"

There are the begging liars, who live by their wits, such wits as they have, who are framing narratives of misfortunes, who are attempting to deceive the charitable, who are "dead beats." Such men and women make a point of going to clergymen at the dinner hour or just after his night sermon. The poor clergymen has barely enough to live on. His only time of waking rest is while he is eating. These impostors know that the man cannot hear a tale of hunger and go back with comfort to his meal without giving some relief. He has been preaching the gospel of charity and he cannot go home and sleep if he do not relieve an applicant who "does not know where to sleep to-night." They know that the clergyman cannot then take time to investigate the case.

The worst of the class is the long-faced liar, the "pious" deceiver who "asks a blessing" on the lie he is about to tell and then "returns thanks" at its success. Alas! for the success! It always comes back on the hypocrite in a curse. God will avenge Himself if any man attempt to make Him party to a falsehood.

Truth is clear. It is easy. It requires no study. It does not have to be watched. The falsehood has no real and permanent power in it. Truth triumphs at last. The simplest soul can conquer life to himself by truth, but it is not in the wit of man to bring beauty and good up out of the reeking corruption of lies.

SOFTLY.

Our education has not been rightly attended to if we have not been taught gentleness. The boy's shout should not be forbidden, but its place is on the hills and highways. In the house he should know to speak and act under the repression that is demanded by the proprieties of the place. No one wishes to restrain the gayety of the girl in whose laugh there is so much of music, and yet delicacy is a characteristic that no woman can afford to do without, and she should be trained to observe it. And for old and young alike, there is no ordinary lesson that is more important than that which relates to genuine gentleness, as it is to be exhibited in our speech and behavior.

Softly—we should always so go to the house of God. It is with joy, indeed, we are to approach the holy gates, and yet it is subdued joy and not that which is rude and demonstrative. The reverent church-goer moves in a spirit of tranquility. He does not wish to disturb the Sabbath's quiet in any circumstances. And entering the place of prayer, he does so as one who seems to feel that to be noisy is to be profane. His careful movement tells how he appreciates the sacredness of a place where God is expected to meet his people.

Softly—we should so go to the private mercy seat. It is a hallowed spot, appointed for us by the Lord, bought for us by the blood of the Saviour, and having been chosen under the guidance of the Spirit, it is sanctified to us by the memory of its experiences. It has been the place of wrestlings, groans and tears. The happiest triumphs of our lives have been achieved there. Its moments of communion have sweetened many a cup that was full of bitterness. Softly, softly—let neither thump nor jar intrude upon its solemn quiet. Lift the latch gently, fasten it noiselessly, for in the near presence of God there should be an impression of awe so profound as to hush even the fingers into reverence.

Softly—so move about the bed of death. It may be a blessing to the sufferer to be quiet. Noise may give him pain; it may disconcert his thoughts as he talks with his Maker. But whether that be so or not, the death scene is one so awful that he who sees it should do so with folded hands and bated breath. The physician who is loud and rough in such a place has not learned the first lesson of his profession. The pastor, friend, visitor, who cannot speak in whispers, step softly, and move with timid care, is seriously out of place. His mission may be among the living, but it is unsuited to the solemnities of the chamber of death.

Softly—let us so act in all the appropriate conditions of life. The soft answer turns away wrath, stops the mouth of bitterness, soothes the soul that is sorrowing, cheers the spirit that languishes. As the rain falls softly on the autumn leaves and distills quietly on desolated fields and meadows, so let human life distribute its influences, for they act upon a world that in all seasons has need of them. —United Presbyterian.

POETIC PARALLELS.

That "there is nothing new under the sun" is as trite as true; and possibly, when the Hebrew king said it, he was himself, but repeating an ancient proverb. Boswell tells us that Dr. Johnson was so convinced of the fact, that he thought of writing a book to demonstrate that the amount of invention in the world was very limited, and that really the same incidents and the same imagery, with but slight variation, have sufficed all the authors who have ever written. Unfortunately, the learned lexicographer never executed his idea; but the position he assumed is perfectly tenable. Thoughts are few, and run in grooves; and there can be no doubt that much which has been denounced as plagiarism is often quite as original, to the author himself, as the bulk of what the world receives as a genuine addition to its stock. Of course there is such a thing as real plagiarism, or downright robbery; but with that it is not our present purpose to deal, our intention being to merely furnish some remarkable examples of poetic coincidences of thought; due apparently, to that unconscious process of assimilation to which Johnson evidently referred.

The greatest poets have always been deemed the greatest offenders by the public; and no man's ideas have been more severely scrutinised by the critics than Shakespeare's. His contemporaries declared he had decked himself in their plumage; and their successors have traced many of his golden opinions to another origin; but unlike too many of his craft, nearly all he touched he improved. Shakespeare's similarities are too well known to call for instances.

Gray's "Elegy" has afforded much occupation for the coincidence seekers, who declare it to be a mere piece of mosaic-work, in which every idea may be traced to former writers, and they prove their assertion. In some of the same writer's other poems, many curious similarities have been detected. If Gray, however, benefited by his predecessors' ideas, many of his successors have resorted to him for theirs. The Koran spoke of the angel Israfel's heartstrings as "a lute;" the "Elegy" alludes to the heartstrings as "the living lyre;" Moore likens it to "the harp of a thousand strings;" Edgar Poe, to "the trembling living wire;" Charlotte Bronte to "the human lyre;" and Beranger to "a lute."

Scarcely second to Gray in these unlucky parallels was Pope; indeed some one went so far as to assert that he was the greatest of all plagiarists. In support of this terrible accusation, much evidence can be adduced. In "Eloise and Abelard" is—

Soft as the slumbers of a saint forgiven;

which is surprisingly like Davenaut's—

Kind as the willing saints, and calmer far
Than in the sleep forgiven hermits are.

Pope's line—

I have not yet forgot myself to marble,

reads too like Milton's "Forget thyself to marble," to be purely accidental; whilst Sir Thomas Browne's words, in his dear old Religio Medici, "Nature is the art of God," sounds suggestive of the Twickenham bard's "All nature is but art." Young, it may be remarked, apparently preferred the old form, as he reproduced it in his "Night Thoughts," verbatim. Denham spoke of

The foul guilt
Of Eastern kings, who, to secure their reign,
Must have their brothers, sons, and kindred slain.

Then Orrery followed with the simile:

Poets are sultans, if they had the will;
For every author would his brother kill.

Whereupon Pope wrote:

Should such a man, too fond to rule alone,
Bear, like the Turk, no brother near the throne.

The close resemblance of these lines beginning

Vital spark of heavenly flame,

to some that were written by Flatman, an almost unknown versifier of Charles II.'s time, has often been commented upon; whilst the well-quoted words—

The proper study of mankind is men.

have been traced to the French: "La vraie science et la vrais etude de l'homme c'est l'homme." From the French, from Boileau's "Art of Poetry," has also been derived Pope's sarcastic line—

Fools rush in where angels fear to tread;

although some deem it suggested by Shakespeare's—

Wrens may prey where angels dare not perch.

In explanation, if not in extenuation of Pope's adaptive proclivities, Thackeray urged that "he polished, he refined, he thought; he took thoughts from others' works to adorn and complete his own, borrowing an idea or cadence from another poet as he would a figure or a simile from a flower, or a river, a stream, or any object which struck him in his walk."

Sir William Jones, who, by the way, detected some close parallels in thought between Hafiz and Shakespeare, is credited with the poetic idea, of undoubted Oriental origin, that "the Moon looks on many night-flowers, the night-flower sees but one Moon." This fancy, which bears some resemblance to an aphorism of Plato's, was probably in Moore's mind when he wrote:

The moon looks on many brooks,
The brook can see no moon but this.

And the late Lord Lytton used a similar idea in the blind girl Nydia's song, where

The wind and the beam loved the rose,
But the Rose loved one.

But there is no need to go abroad for these transmissions of thought. It is really surprising how many writers will use the same idea without any material alteration, one after the other. A case in point is the oft-quoted line of Campbell—

Like angel visits few and far between;

and which, unfortunately for the latter poet's fame, the ancients said before him. In Blair's "Grave" is—

Its visits,
Like those of angels, short and far between;

which is at least better expressed; although perhaps the originator—so far as we have as yet traced the idea—has expressed it in the best way, as originators generally do:

Like angels' visits short and bright.

One of Campbell's supposed borrowings was drawn attention to by Byron, who, not beyond suspicion himself in such matters, asked whether the origin of the far famed couplet—

'Tis distance lends enchantment to the view,
And robes the mountain in its azure hue,

was not to be found in Dyer's—

As yon summits, soft and fair,
Clad in colors of the air,
Which, to those who journey near,
Barren, bleak and brown appear.

Certainly the rendering by the author of "The Pleasures of Hope" is the more attractive; and it is more probable, if the idea was not original with him, that he derived it rather from a line of Collins's splendid ode on "The Passion."

In notes by distance made more sweet.

As hinted, Byron has not been deemed free from all reproach in these matters; but it must be confessed that few cases of close parallelism are discoverable between his ideas and those of his predecessors; he has been more sinned against, in that respect, than sinning. Probably he had in mind Churchill's lines—

The gods a kindness I with thanks repay,
Had formed me of another sort of clay—

when in "Childe Harold" he wrote—

Because not altogether of such clay
As rots into the souls of those whom I survey.

In his "Prophecy of Dante," he used a favorite thought:

Many are the poets who have never penned
Their inspiration, and perchance the best.

Wordsworth gave the idea as:

O many are the poets that are sown
By Nature! men endowed with highest gifts—
The vision and the faculty divine—
Yet wanting the accomplishment of verse.

And our genial transatlantic friend Holmes, in "The Voiceless" tells of

Those that never sing,
But die with all their music in them.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from Exchanges:

The King of Congo, Africa, has joined the Baptist church. He is the only crowned head in the denomination.

The Sandwich Islands gave $3 893 for foreign missions last year, and the Karens of Burmah contributed over $31,000 for the same purpose.

At Port Said, evangelistic labors among the crews of the vessels passing through the Suez Canal have been kept up for some time by a Mr. Whittock, who is unconnected with any missionary society.

Ten years ago, the Presbytery of Manitoba, in British America, was formed, with two ordained ministers and six preaching stations. There are now twenty ordained missionaries and one hundred preaching stations.

In the action at law between the Propaganda Fide and the Council of Liquidation, the Court of Appeal at Rome has confirmed the judgment given by the Tribunal of First Instance declaring the property of the Propaganda Fide subject to conversion like that of other religious associations.

At Barcelona and Alicante hostile demonstrations have been made by the populace against the landing of some French monks. At the former place the monks were compelled to take refuge in the cathedral, and subsequently, to re-embark in the vessel which had brought them.

It is reported from St. Petersburg that the Governor-General of Kazan will shortly be put on his trial for forcibly attempting to convert 700,000 Tartars to the Greek church. Flogging seems to have been extensively used as the means of persuasion, and bells were hung by his orders in the minarets.

The Portuguese Government have published a decree citing the provisions of the law of the Marquis of Pombal, prohibiting Jesuit communities and establishments in Portugal. The law is still in vigour. The decree orders the civil governors and public functionaries throughout the kingdom to use all vigilance in order to prevent any infringment of the law.

On Sabbath a pastoral letter from Cardinal Manning was read in all the Roman Catholic churches of the diocese of Westminster, desiring the aid of the congregations in a scheme for providing employment for poor Roman Catholic children after leaving school. The Cardinal stated that steps had been taken to send a number to Canada, the Canadian bishops having offered to receive 500, the cost of sending out of whom will be £5.

Advices just received from Central Africa by the Baptist Missionary Society, report that Messrs. Comber and Hartland, two of their representatives, who lately left England upon a Congo mission expedition, having been entrapped by an urgent invitation to visit the Makuta towns, were savagely attacked, and ultimately fired at. Both were injured, one somewhat seriously. The bullet wounds were received whilst the missionaries were escaping.

The Burials Act has been brought into operation at Epworth, John Wesley's birthplace. An aged Roman Catholic died, and the Rev. Canon Garden, of Crowle, in accordance with the wishes of the deceased's relatives, took steps to have her buried according to her faith. Although the notice required under the Act had not been strictly given, the vicar, the Hon. and Rev. Mr. Dundas, at once consented, and the interment took place. It is 320 years since a Roman Catholic priest officiated at a funeral in Epworth Churchyard.

New troubles are manifesting themselves at the Vatican. The commission for the collection of Peter's pence has just sent in this year's account, showing a lamentable falling off. Three causes are assigned for this—hard times affecting the contributors; secondly, the change of person from Pius IX. to Leo XIII.; thirdly, the new organization of the method of collecting, which, if it prevents waste and embezzlement, disgusts and alienates the collectors. Many Bishops have intimated to the Pope that if he wishes to collect larger supplies he must adopt a policy of resistance, and abandon conciliation.

EXTRACTS FROM A YOUNG LADY'S LETTERS HOME.

NEW YORK, November 8, 1880.

Yesterday Miss L. and I walked up Madison avenue to Dr. Tyng's church on Forty second street. The day was bright and cold, and the beautiful houses and buildings on this elegant street appeared to the best advantage. The sidewalks were thronged with handsomely dressed people. The Church of the Holy Trinity is built of tiled brick, with stone facings, square tower and open arcades, stained glass windows in three different rows. The room is a semi-ellipse, the chancel a semi-hexagon, and the arched and painted recess behind is semi-octagonal. Above the arch are the words, "The testimony of Jesus is the Spirit of prophecy;" and a verse is on each of the three windows in the recess. There were four ministers to assist Dr. Tyng, as it it was a communion occasion. A good part of the morning service was omitted. Dr. Tyng's sermon was addressed to wordly Christians, from the text—"For we are come as far as to you also in preaching the Gospel." The whole discourse was extremely interesting. Dr. Tyng has the same liveliness of address that Talmage has, but shows more refinement. Has a fine clear voice and a much better manner (more impressive), than most Episcopal preachers that I have heard. * * * He began by saying: "Corinth is but another name in the vocabulary of the world's votaries for cultnre, and even as far as unto them the Apostle's challenge comes." * * * Pointing ont their inconsistencies he said: "Many who are eager to cast a stone at a fallen woman will countenance the same vice in another where genius and art are joined with it," &c. (This referred to Bernhardt and the reception given her here. I am told that many sermons are directed against her from the city pulpits.) "In the generation just passed away, every Christian house was a theological seminary where the children were trained to fear God. Now we find instead the milliner's show-room, and conversation led by the dress-maker."

Towards the close, he rose into eloquence: "And to you who are far distant from the land of peace and happiness where the believer dwells, I will say there is no other name under heaven whereby you can be saved but the Lord Jesus Christ's; there is no other Moses to show you the promised land; there is no other Joshua to lead you over into the land flowing with milk and honey; there is no other David to establish a throne of salvation and righteousness; no other Isaiah to lead you to lofty and noble aspirations. Ye who submit to the yoke of the Nazarine do but follow the crowd of saints around the throne:—

> Go, ask them whence their victory came,
> They with united breath
> Ascribe their conquest to the Lamb,
> Their triumph to His death.

After the sermon, a great crowd remained to the communion, and Dr. Tyng's invitation to "all disciples to come to the Master's table" was so cordial that we felt constrained to stay. Every part of the ceremony was so beautifully arranged, with such order, such solemnity and silence, broken only by the voice of the officiating minister. * * * At night we heard Dr. Deems.

* * * * *

NOVEMBER 10th.

Last Monday night we were at the Broadway Tabernacle, attending a great Sunday school meeting. This is Dr. Taylor's church: elegantly adorned with blue and gold, and beautifully lit up and crowded. Most of the great city preachers were there. Dr. Hall, with his rich voice and fluent utterance, was chairman, and opened the meeting with a first-rate address, chiefly about the Sunday school meeting in Belfast, Ireland, last summer. He said many first-rate things in support of the Sunday school as an institution, and of the international lessons.

Dr. Taylor's was the principal address of the evening, as he was delegate from America to the Sunday School Centennial in London last summer, and had much to tell. He described the meetings there. He deplored the want of Christian fellowship with the Church of England: "I who have so long breathed the purer air of American freedom felt pained to see that the children belonging to the Sunday schools of the Established Church were entirely seperated from those of the other schools. The latter held their celebration in the Crystal Palace, while none but the children of the schools of the Church of England were held worthy to be admitted to the open air festival presided over by the Archbishop of Canterbury. They need some one to cry 'Shame! shame!' and none could do this more appropriately than I, for the errors of my native land touch me deeply. I do cry shame! for I tell them the Sunday school is greater than the Archbishop of Canterbury—aye greater than the Queen on her throne, for it is God's work." He spoke next of the Sunday school as first established by Robert Raikes. The teachers were paid, and this threatened the ruin of the whole scheme, "when a band of right young men (and God above knows how much young men have done for His Church) came forward, introducing the system of voluntary teaching, and from that time the work has gone forward triumphantly for one hundred years. The seed scattered first in England, has been carried far and wide, and its harvest is waving now in every land."

He spoke of Sunday school libraries, and deplored the novelettes admitted to them; said he did not object to fiction if it was true; defined the difference between truth and fact, when the audience smiled at the idea of true fiction.

Dr. Hall spoke of the want of preaching designed especially for the young and made attractive to them; that young people will not come out unless they feel and know there will be something for them especially. * * * When we got home our escorts came in and staid and staid. In this matter I confess I discern but little difference between North and South.

NOVEMBER 18th

Nothing gives you so much interest in your Church and its services as working for it. I am so thankful for the little I have been able to do for mine at home. I know there were times when I was reluctant to go on with it—be always there, be punctual, and feel compelled to do it. But now the familiarity with our service and our hymns is just invaluable to me. I am at home in every church here. Our hymns are so often sung: our familiar tunes seem popular here. How I do enjoy them. How dear and home-like even these splendid city churches are. They all seem one to me, though of course my own seems nearest.

I am going to send you a specimen of my "Keramics" by Thanksgiving day. I find the work just as fascinating as all painting is, and am getting over the first difficulties. I have been painting some of the lovely autumn leaves you sent me—the dear North Carolina leaves. How I enjoyed showing them at "Cooper." These Northern girls had never seen a sweetgum leaf nor a tulip-tree; and as to those great, glossy "black-jacks," they didn't even know what they were! I don't believe they have any gum trees here at all. * * * We Southerner's don't half know what a glorious country we have got; don't know half our advantages and blessings, and how much we have to be proud of and thankful for.

NOVEMBER 26th.

I went to Dr. Tyng's church for my Thanksgiving sermon, as it was conveniently near where I had been invited to eat my Thanksgiving dinner. The city was full of snow, but nobody minds snow or rain here. Dr. Tyng's sermon was a review of God's mercies to our country. It was a stimulating review. He read Dr. Franklin's excellent letter to the first Congress, recommending the appointment of a chaplain. The music was magnficent.

After the sermon we went into the basement of the building to see the church's "harvest home" for the poor. There were barrels and barrels of flour and potatoes and apples; long tables covered with uncooked hams and turkeys and ducks and chickens—with rice and sugar and coffee, and canned vegetables and fruits of all sorts. Such profuse bounty I never saw in my life. After prayer and singing these gifts were distributed. How many people went rejoicing out of that room. And I suppose every church in the city had just such a Thanksgiving: and yet so vast is New York, and so great the amount of wretchedness and want and sin and misery here, that all these lovely Christian charities are hardly sufficient to answer the demand.

NO WOMEN PREACHERS.

Most, if not all the Christian denominations of the country, unite in the American Tract Society, and no books are published which committees of these bodies do not agree to. In a note on 1 Tim. ii, 12, they say: "It is the revealed will of God that public religious teachers should be men, not women. He has allotted to them different spheres of action, and the perfection of each consists not in aspiring or submitting to occupy the place of the other, but in performing their own appropriate duties." The passage is, "but I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence.

THE LORD'S CALL.

Ebenezer (colored) Presbyterian church, in Newbern, N. C., was dedicated on Sabbath, November 7th, 1880. Three adults, two of whom were baptised, were received, and the Lord's Supper was celebrated. By special request of the Session, Rev. L. C. Vass, pastor of the 1st Presbyterian church, conducted an afternoon service, especially for the generous white citizens, who also made a dedication contribution.

This Church is in pretty gothic style, and has been built very cheaply. It is not entirely finished, being unpainted, inclosed by a rude fence and without a bell or communion service. But the congregation rejoices that it can be used with comfort. Lot and building have thus far cost over $1,600 and $1,150 have been collected and paid, leaving a balance due of $450 to $500. Leaving out what was received from Newbern and the Sustentation Fund, the amount raised was contributed by twelve churches, (9 in North Carolina and 3 outside,) and about one hundred individual donors. If all who knew about this great work and felt kindly towards it, had only sent a small contribution of ONE DOLLAR, as requested, there would be no deficiency.

But there is a debt of over $450. All the energies of Ebenezer church are demanded for its current work, pastor's salary, &c. Will not those, who have shown their christian kindness already, and many others, sympathizing with this work for the Master among the colored people, just lend a helping hand now to set this colored church in a clear field for future service? Many willing hands and loving hearts make quick and easy work, in Jesus' name. Can you not spare a Christmas or New Year's gift to this cause? Will you not? Donations, large or small, may be sent to our Treasurer, REV. L. C. VASS, NEWBERN, N. C.

WORDS OF COUNSEL.

MR EDITOR:—I do not think I shall find myself mistaken in supposing that the extract I send you with this, and such others as shall be sent, will not be unwelcome in the columns of your valuable paper.

They are words of counsel and and of cheer written from time to time by one "who being dead yet speaketh:"

> "Who fought his doubts and gathered strength,
> Who would not make his judgment blind,
> Who faced the spectres of the wind
> And laid them."

And they are so full of Christian faith and freshness, that it would seem an act of selfishness to withhold them from any whom they may aid in the Christian life. WAIF.

"You do right to look at all schemes possible for helping yourself; so far is that from being unbelief, that faith commands it.

Faith sees a duty, and straightway and gladly does it. Isn't that common sense? Which are you trying to walk by, faith or sight, when you are studying and praying to have Providence explained? Don't you know that it is one of the Lord's favorite ways silently to make us do the duty at hand, and surprise us with the result? Don't waste life and fret your heart trying to understand, but frankly do what comes to be done.

> "Do the little thou canst do,
> And leave the rest to God."

"Do I believe that God lets us see why He puts us in just the place He chooses? No my dear. When He tells me "What I do Thou knowest not now;" when Paul says: I go bound in the Spirit unto Jerusalem, not knowing the things that shall befall me there; when Isaiah says: "Verily, Thou art a God that keepest silence, &c," should I believe that He is going to take me aside and explain all to me? The Lord hath said that He would dwell in the thick darkness. Amen! Amen! "Even so Father for so it seemeth good in Thy sight"

* * * * *

As to the prophecies and the war. I understand ni l'un ni l'autre. I want Turkey whipped to death, absolutely and finally, but I do not want Russia to put iron bands around our great mission stations and kill them. It is impossible to detest Turkish rule too much. I am afraid it is impossible to expect too little of Russia's liberality or manageableness. As to the prophecies: "Never fash your beard wi 'em." When things happen you are almost certain to know it,—before hand, almost sure not. But the Lord's will be done! His plans are right and wise, but no more to be understood in advance than the prophecies.

* * * * *

Clear providential indication of duty, I have come to consider among God's chief mercies. I believe I should fret myself away, if any thing less had brought me into my present situation.

* * * * *

We all condole with you in your trouble. But be sure to be cheerful. Do you know that cheerfulness is one of the cardinal virtues?

* * * * *

The saddest and sublimest order heard on the battle field is: "Close up the ranks," i. e.: let the survivors draw nearer as shots and shell make gaps. That is just what we must do now, as death mows down so many that stood with us.

* * * * *

There is always least danger where duty is, and duty is to be learned by providential indications. Generally too, there is least danger where we are afraid.

THE SUNNY HOME.

I know of a room where sunshine lingers, and there is a breath of summer and mignonette in the air whenever I think of it. There a tired man comes home and throws off overcoat and hat without looking to see what becomes of them. There is a broad table in the light, strewn with papers and magazines, woman's work, with a litter of rose leaves dropping over them from a central vase. There is a wide sofa of the days of the Georges, fresh covered in chintz, with ferns and harebells for patterns, and a tired man goes down there with a great ruffled pillow under his shoulders, and opens parcels and letters dropping them on the floor—most natural place for them. A girl has been painting, and her water-colors and papers lie on a side table, just as she left them to rush for an impromptu ride. I have never been able to discover any disarrangement of the household economy by this flight. Somebody left a shaw on a chair. There will be nothing said about it at breakfast next morning.

There are no laws here against playing with the curtain tassels, no regulations as to how often the snowy curtains may be put up or left down. They do not last the season out, crisp and speckless as the neighbors do across the way, but the only consequence is they are oftener new and clean. There is nothing very fine about this house, but things are renewed oftener and look brighter than they do in other houses. The chairs have no particular places, and anybody feels at liberty to draw the sofa out when it pleases him. There is no primness about the place. If there is grass on the lawn, it is meant to be walked on, and the geraniums are fondled and petted and caressed as if they were children. Do you know there is a magnetism in green leaves and growing flowers derived from the earth's heart, that makes it good to handle and feel them? This house is known as the place where one dares to breakfast. There is no ceremony of waiting. Coffee and cakes are put where they will be hot; the table is cleared to suit the housekeeper's convenience, and a small one set for the late comer.

Nobody lies awake at night till the light ceases to shine under your chamber door, if you want to sit up and read a volume through. There is an unwritten law of convenience for the household which regulates better than any Code Napoleonic. And the benefit of allowing people to be a law unto themselves is, that they are much better natured about it when they do obey. There is indulgence and repose in this lovely home, and a great deal of time for things which most people cut short: an hour's play with the children, "a right down" good chat with a neighbor, a day of letter-writing once a fortnight. Disorder does not imply dust or soil of any kind. It does not include shabbiness or mean chaos. It means "leave to be"—in most cases, thinking of people more than things. Order is simply harmony of a few notes. Disorder is the flowering, branching melody of one theme—and that theme, individuality.—Southern Churchman.

SUNRISE.

Now rests the world
In pure pearl colors folded;
Wan are the frosts that gleam upon the grass,
And ghastly pale the mists that veil the valleys.
In rank and file, like soldiers grim,
The trees loom thro' the shadows;
And over all, the soft gray skies
Bend in unbroken calm.
Soft and gray save where the uplands meet,
The tender lines where shadows melt,
The day-spring's first fair blushes lie, and there
Into the silence faintly fall
The mellow tones of the early bells, and lo!
From behind the hills, with majestic port and slow,
Rises the red, red autumn sun. —Hesper.

LIARS.

BY REV. DR. DEEMS.

We are growing too polite, to call things by their right names. We have softened "Grog-shops" into "Sample-Rooms," and those whom our blunt Saxon ancestors called "liars," we now designate as "persons who are conspicuously inexact." And the doom of those people, which is thus stated in our good old honest Bible, "All liars shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone," we euphemistically paraphrase into "All those who are conspicuously inexact shall go to a place of very torrid temperature."

To charge a man with being a liar, is to offer him the last possible indignity, because it lays at his door the most despicable of the crimes, a crime which involves total demoralization. There was a time when it resulted in a duel, and if a duel ought ever to be fought, it is upon such a charge. A man that is a liar deserves to be shot, if any man ever does. To make the charge is to attempt to do the man the greatest injury possible.

It is the most despicable of crimes because a liar is a coward, a knave and a fool. He is a coward because he does not dare to face the results of facts of his own creating. He is a knave because he attempts to gain ends by false pretences. He is a fool because he does not see that, if all men were liars, society would be hurled into a hell of anarchy.

There is no defence for it. It is not witty, nor wise, nor beautiful, nor profitable. Any blockhead can lie. A lie is a moral deformity. It has no counter-part in any reality. All nature and all the fixed facts of the universe conspire to fling a lie up to the surface and fling it out, as the bodily system makes a universal effort to eject poison. In the long run, the truth will come to be known and the lie exposed. In the long run, therefore, the lie is unprofitable.

There are polite liars, whom we smoothly call "diplomats," men whose paws are as velvet, but armed with claws like steel. They gain nothing by direct force of truth. Their whole brains are given to the study of circumvention. As soon as a man who is smoother and more patient comes along, their time of ruin comes.

There are liars of gossip, men and women, the only salt of whose discourse is falsehood, who scatter firebrands, arrows and death, and say, "Are we not in sport?"

There are the begging liars, who live by their wits, such wits as they have, who are framing narratives of misfortunes, who are attempting to deceive the charitable, who are "dead beats." Such men and women make a point of going to clergymen at the dinner hour or just after his night sermon. The poor clergyman has barely enough to live on. His only time of waking rest is while he is eating. These impostors know that the man cannot hear a tale of hunger and go back with comfort to his meal without giving some relief. He has been preaching the gospel of charity and he cannot go home and sleep if he do not relieve an applicant who "does not know where to sleep tonight." They know that the clergyman cannot then take time to investigate the case.

The worst of the class is the long faced liar, the "pious" deceiver who "asks a blessing" on the lie he is about to tell and then "returns thanks" at its success. Alas! for the success! It always comes back on the hypocrite in a curse. God will avenge Himself if any man attempt to make Him party to a falsehood.

Truth is clear. It is easy. It requires no study. It does not have to be watched. The falsehood has no real and permanent power in it. Truth triumphs at last. The simplest soul can conquer life to himself by truth, but it is not in the wit of man to bring beauty and good np out of the reeking corruption of lies.

SOFTLY.

Our education has not been rightly attended to if we have not been taught gentleness. The boy's shout should not be forbidden, but its place is on the hills and highways. In the house he should know to speak and act under the repression that is demanded by the proprieties of the place. No one wishes to restrain the gayety of the girl in whose laugh there is so much of music, and yet delicacy is a characteristic that no woman can afford to do without, and she should be trained to observe it. And for old and young alike, there is no ordinary lesson that is more important than that which relates to genuine gentleness, as it is to be exhibited in our speech and behavior.

Softly—we should always so go to the house of God. It is with joy, indeed, we are to approach the holy gates, and yet it is subdued joy and not that which is rude and demonstrative. The reverent church-goer moves in a spirit of tranquility. He does not wish to disturb the Sabbath's quiet in any circumstances. And entering the place of prayer, he does so as one who seems to feel that to be noisy is to be profane. His careful movement tells how he appreciates the sacredness of a place where God is expected to meet his people.

Softly—we should so go to the private mercy seat. It is a hallowed spot, appointed for us by the Lord, bought for us by the blood of the Saviour, and having been chosen under the guidance of the Spirit, it is sanctified to us by the memory of its experiences. It has been the place of wrestlings, groans and tears. The happiest triumphs of our lives have been achieved there. Its moments of communion have sweetened many a cup that was full of bitterness. Softly, softly—let neither thump nor jar intrude upon its solemn quiet. Lift the latch gently, fasten it noiselessly, for in the near presence of God there should be an impression of awe so profound as to hush even the fingers into reverence.

Softly—so move about the bed of death. It may be a blessing to the sufferer to be quiet. Noise may give him pain; it may disconcert his thoughts as he talks with his Maker. But whether that be so or not, the death scene is one so awful that he who sees it should do so with folded hands and bated breath. The physician who is loud and rough in such a place has not learned the first lesson of his profession. The pastor, friend, visitor, who cannot speak in whispers, step softly, and move with timid care, is seriously out of place. His mission may be among the living, but it is unsuited to the solemnities of the chamber of death.

Softly—let us so act in all the appropriate conditions of life. The soft answer turns away wrath, stops the mouth of bitterness, soothes the soul that is sorrowing, cheers the spirit that languishes. As the rain falls softly on the autumn leaves and distills quietly on desolated fields and meadows, so let human life distribute its influences, for they act upon a world that in all seasons has need of them. —United Presbyterian.

POETIC PARALLELS.

That "there is nothing new under the sun" is as trite as true; and possibly, when the Hebrew king said it, he was himself but repeating an ancient proverb. Boswell tells us that Dr. Johnson was so convinced of the fact, that he thought of writing a book to demonstrate that the amount of invention in the world was very limited, and that really the same incidents and the same imagery, with but slight variation, have sufficed all the authors who have ever written. Unfortunately, the learned lexicographer never executed his idea; but the position he assumed is perfectly tenable. Thoughts are few, and run in grooves; and there can be no donbt that much which has been denounced as plagiarism is often quite as original, to the author himself, as the bulk of what the world receives as a genuine addition to its stock. Of course there is such a thing as real plagiarism, or downright robbery; but with that it is not our present purpose to deal, our intention being to merely furnish some remarkable examples of poetic coincidences of thought; due apparently, to that unconscious process of assimilation to which Johnson evidently referred.

The greatest poets have always been deemed the greatest offenders by the public; and no men's ideas have been more severely scrutinized by the critics than Shakespeare's. His contemporaries declared he had decked himself in their plumage; and their successors have traced many of his golden opinions to another origin; but unlike too many of his craft, nearly all he touched he improved. Shakespeare's similarities are too well known to call for instances.

Gray's "Elegy" has afforded much occupation for the coincidence seekers, who declare it to be a mere piece of mosaic-work, in which every idea may be traced to former writers, and they prove their assertion. In some of the same writer's other poems, many curious similarities have been detected. If Gray, however, benefited by his predecessors' ideas, many of his successors have resorted to him for theirs. The Koran spoke of the angel Israfel's heartstrings as "a lute;" the "Elegy" alludes to the heartstrings as "the living lyre;" Moore likens it to "the harp of a thousand strings;" Edgar Poe, to "the trembling living wire;" Charlotte Bronte to "the human lyre;" and Beranger to "a lute."

Scarcely second to Gray in these unlucky parallels was Pope; indeed some one went so far as to assert that he was the greatest of all plagiarists. In support of this terrible accusation, much evidence can be addnced. In "Eloise and Abelard" is—

> Soft as the slumbers of a saint forgiven;

which is surprisingly like Davenant's—

> Kind as the willing saints, and calmer far
> Than in the sleep forgiven hermits are.

Pope's line—

> I have not yet forgot myself to marble,

reads too like Milton's "Forget thyself to marble," to be purely accidental; whilst Sir Thomas Browne's words, in his dear old Religio Medici, "Nature is the art of God," sounds suggestive of the Twickenham bard's "All nature is but art." Young, it may be remarked, apparently preferred the old form, as he reproduced it in his "Night Thoughts," verbatim. Denham spoke of

> The foul guilt
> Of Eastern kings, who, to secure their reign,
> Must have their brothers, sons, and kindred slain.

Then Orrery followed with the simile:

> Poets are sultans, if they had the will;
> For every author would his brother kill.

Whereupon Pope wrote:

> Should such a man, too fond to rule alone,
> Bear, like the Turk, no brother near the throne.

The close resemblance of these lines beginning

> Vital spark of heavenly flame,

to some that were written by Flatman, an almost unknown versifier of Charles II.'s time, has often been commented upon; whilst the well quoted words—

> The proper study of mankind is man.

have been traced to the French: "La vrais science et la vrais etude de l'homme c'est l'homme." From the French, from Boileau's "Art of Poetry," has also been derived Pope's sarcastic line—

> Fools rush in where angels fear to tread;

although some deem it suggested by Shakespeare's—

> Wrens may prey where angels dare not perch.

In explanation, if not in extenuation of Pope's adaptive proclivities, Thackeray urged that "he polished, he refined, he thought; he took thoughts from others' works to adorn and complete his own, borrowing an idea or cadence from another poet as he would a figure or a simile from a flower, or a river, a stream, or any object which struck him in his walk."

Sir William Jones, who, by the way, detected some close parallels in thought between Hafiz and Shakespeare, is credited with the poetic idea, of undoubted Oriental origin, that "the Moon looks on many night-flowers, the night-flower sees but one Moon." This fancy, which bears some resemblance to an aphorism of Plato's, was probably in Moore's mind when he wrote:

> The moon looks on many brooks,
> The brook can see no moon but this.

And the late Lord Lytton need a similar idea in the blind girl Nydia's song, where

> The wind and the beam loved the rose,
> But the Rose loved one.

But there is no need to go abroad for these transmissions of thought. It is really surprising how many writers will use the same idea without any material alteration, one after the other. A case in point is the oft-quoted line of Campbell—

> Like angel visits few and far between;

and which, unfortunately for the latter poet's fame, the ancients said before him. In Blair's "Grave" is—

> Its visits,
> Like those of angels, short and far between;

which is at least better expressed; although perhaps the originator—so far as we have as yet traced the idea—has expressed it in the best way, as originators generally do:

> Like angels' visits short and bright.

One of Campbell's supposed borrowings was drawn attention to by Byron, who, not beyond suspicion himself in such matters, asked whether the origin of the far-famed couplet—

> 'Tis distance lends enchantment to the view,
> And robes the mountain in its azure hue,

was not to be found in Dyer's—

> As yon summits, soft and fair,
> Clad in colors of the air,
> Which, to those who journey near,
> Barren, bleak and brown appear.

Certainly the rendering by the author of "The Pleasures of Hope" is the more attractive; and it is more probable, if she idea was not original with him, that he derived it rather from a line of Collins's splendid ode on "The Passion."

> In notes by distance made more sweet.

As hinted, Byron has not been deemed free from all reproach in these matters; but it must be confessed that few cases of close parallelism are discoverable between his ideas and those of his predecessors; he has been more sinned against, in that respect, than sinning. Probably he had in mind Churchill's lines—

> The gods a kindness I with thanks repay,
> Had formed me of another sort of clay—

when in "Childe Harold" he wrote—

> Because not altogether of such clay
> As rots into the souls of those whom I survey.

In his "Prophecy of Dante," he used a favorite thought:

> Many are the poets who have never penned
> Their inspiration, and perchance the best.

Wordsworth gave the idea as:

> O many are the poets that are sown
> By Nature! men endowed with highest gifts—
> The vision and the faculty divine—
> Yet wanting the accomplishment of verse.

And our genial transatlantic friend Holmes, in "The Voiceless" tells of

> Those that never sing,
> But die with all their music in them.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from Exchanges:

The King of Congo, Africa, has joined the Baptist church. He is the only crowned head in the denomination.

The Sandwich Islands gave $3 893 for foreign missions last year, and the Karens of Burmah contributed over $31,000 for the same purpose.

At Port Said, evangelistic labors among the crews of the vessels passing through the Suez Canal have been kept up for some time by a Mr. Whittock, who is unconnected with any missionary society.

Ten years ago, the Presbytery of Manitoba, in British America, was formed, with two ordained ministers and six preaching stations. There are now twenty ordained missionaries and one hundred preaching stations.

In the action at law between the Propaganda Fide and the Council of Liquidation, the Court of Appeal at Rome has confirmed the judgment given by the Tribunal of First Instance declaring the property of the Propaganda Fide subject to conversion like that of other religious associations.

At Barcelona and Alicante hostile demonstrations have been made by the populace against the landing of some French monks. At the former place the monks were compelled to take refuge in the cathedral, and subsequently, to re-embark in the vessel which had brought them.

It is reported from St. Petersburg that the Governor-General of Kazan will shortly be put on his trial for forcibly attempting to convert 700,000 Tartars to the Greek church. Flogging seems to have been extensively used as the means of persuasion, and bells were hung by his orders in the minarets.

The Portuguese Government have published a decree citing the provisions of the law of the Marquis of Pombal, prohibiting Jesuit communities and establishments in Portugal. The law is still in vigour. The decree orders the civil governors and public functionaries throughout the kingdom to use all vigilance in order to prevent any infringment of the law.

On Sabbath a pastoral letter from Cardinal Manning was read in all the Roman Catholic churches of the diocese of Westminster, desiring the aid of the congregations in a scheme for providing employment for poor Roman Catholic children after leaving school. The Cardinal stated that steps had been taken to send a number to Canada, the Canadian bishops having offered to receive 560, the cost of sending out of whom will be £5.

Advices just received from Central Africa by the Baptist Missionary Society, report that Messrs. Comber and Hartland, two of their representatives, who lately left England upon a Congo mission expedition, having been entrapped by an urgent invitation to visit the Makuta towns, were savagely attacked, and ultimately fired at. Both were injured, one somewhat seriously. The bullet wounds were received whilst the missionaries were escaping.

The Burials Act has been brought into operation at Epworth, John Wesley's birthplace. An aged Roman Catholic died, and the Rev. Canon Garden, of Crowle, in accordance with the wishes of the deceased's relatives, took steps to have her buried according to her faith. Although the notice required under the Act had not been strictly given, the vicar, the Hon. and Rev. M. Dundas, at once consented, and the interment took place. It is 320 years since a Roman Catholic priest officiated at a funeral in Epworth Churchyard.

New troubles are manifesting themselves at the Vatican. The commission for the collection of Peter's pence has just sent in this year's account, showing a lamentable falling off. Three causes are assigned for this—hard times affecting the contributors; secondly, the change of person from Pius IX to Leo XIII.; thirdly, the new organization of the method of collecting, which, it is prevents waste and embezzlement, disgusts and alienates the collectors. Many Bishops have intimated to the Pope that if he wishes to collect larger supplies he must adopt a policy of resistance, and abandon conciliation.

NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN.

The Presbyterian.

JOHN McLAURIN - Editor

WILMINGTON, N. C.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1880.

SURPRISES.

A lack of knowledge of the workings of Presbyterianism leads to surprising consequences at times. Thus a lady once expressed great dissatisfaction that in a particular church the session took the whole government into their hands. The reply was easy: "that was not new, inasmuch as in the days of the apostles sessions did the same, and in every properly constituted Presbyterian church they have been doing so ever since." Another person was greatly surprised and somewhat indignant that the session after examination should reject an applicant. They had nothing to do, so it was held, but receive into membership any one applying for admission, without regard to examination.

We are led to note these, from falling upon a surprise which overtook a correspondent of the St. Louis Presbyterian, and to which J. B. A.—which we take to be Dr. Adger—thus replies:

"Your correspondent 'Linwood,' it seems, has witnessed an ordination of a minister performed after the genuine Presbyterian way, and not in the semi-prelatic fashion in which it is frequently carried out. He was 'surprised' to see ruling elders lay on hands along with the preaching elders, when the presbytery was ordaining a man to the ministry. Perhaps he has been accustomed to think that ruling elders were not really members of the presbytery. But what is a presbytery but a body of presbyters, and what is a presbyter but a ruler? It is as ruling elders, not as teaching elders, that ministers are admitted to membership in a presbytery. And all the ordinary acts of a presbytery are ruling acts, although, like every other court of the Church, the presbytery has power to make deliverances of doctrine. Especially is ordination a governmental act; it is the act not of the ministers who happen to be in the presbytery, but the act of the whole presbytery admitting a man to the ministry. From the time when the presbytery first takes a candidate under its care to the period when he is ordained, it never is the ministers of the presbytery who act alone, and they never in any one part of the matter act as ministers, but it is the presbytery that votes to receive the young man under its care, that votes to assign him certain parts of trial, that votes to sustain his examination, and that votes to proceed with his ordination when it is satisfied with the call he has received. Why, then, should it not be for the presbytery to do the last part of his induction, which is the mere ceremony of laying on of hands upon his head and devoting him thus to the work of the ministry? And our Book, both the old and the new, following Scripture, prescribes that the presbytery shall lay on hands and all the members give him the right hand.

"'Linwood' asks if one can ordain another to an office which he does not himself fill? Certainly. Does not the Chief Justice inaugurate the President?

"'Linwood' says ruling elders cannot administer the sacraments. No, that is a ministerial act. The sacrament is an appendage to the Word, and belongs to the ministry. But ordination is not a sacrament with Protestants, and it does not belong to the ministry as such.

"The ordination of a minister inducts him into a two-fold office—the office of a teaching and ruling elder. When the elder gives the right hand, and says 'to take part in this ministry with us,' he refers of course to the ruling function."

PETER-PENCE.

MR. EDITOR:—I see that you sometimes answer questions, so I take the liberty of asking you the origin and history of Peter-Pence. INQUIRER.

We are glad to answer this inquiry from a miss in her teens.

Peter-Pence is a contribution from Romanists for the maintenance and support of the pope of Rome. The name being derived from the notion, sincerely, though erroneously entertained by Roman Catholics, that the pope is a lineal and official successor of St. Peter. The idea of a tribute of the kind is supposed by some to have originated with Ina, King of the West Saxons, A. D. 721, and in this wise: Ina having made a pilgrimage to Rome established there a place for entertainment of all pilgrims from his country and exacted an annual contribution for its maintenance. Lingard, the historian, ascribes its origin to Alfred the Great over a century later. Every family possessing land or cattle of the yearly value of thirty pence, was required to pay a silver penny. This tax called Romescot, was continued, except during the reign of John, until the time of Henry VIII, when it was abolished. When it became diverted into the Pope's general treasury does not appear. Gregory VII—A. D. 1073—1085—endeavored to establish it in France and it was extended to other continental kingdoms. The papal states of Italy and England, under John, being feudatory provinces, contributed in another way and were exempt from this tax.

Since the revolution of 1848 in the papal dominions, from which time the temporal possessions of the papacy rapidly slipped from the grasp of the Roman pontiff, he has been in large measure dependent for revenue upon Peter-pence. Since 1870, when his temporal sovereignty ceased, he has had no other reliance. France, Belgium, England, Ireland and the United States, contribute liberally. In 1861, the contributions to Pius IX, exceeded $2,000,000. Ordinarily they probably do not exceed $1,200,000, and latterly, under the less popular administration of Leo XIII, they are said to be diminishing greatly. A pope cannot be considered very poor, however, with over $1,000,000 annual income.

The late Methodist Episcopal Conference of North Carolina resolved to memorialize the next Legislature to enact a prohibitory liquor law, and the members of the Conference pledged themselves to use, as individuals, all proper efforts to effect such prohibition.

COLPORTAGE.

We had the pleasure of noting, some months ago, the successful inauguration by Capt. W. J. Potter, in the service of the American Tract Society, of colportage in the Bahama Islands. After three months hearty service during the last winter, he returned to his home in North Carolina. In his labors in the Bahamas he was assisted by a young man, Mr. Thompson. With recommendations from Capt. Potter and from influential men on the islands, Mr. Thompson secured the position of colporteur and for the last five months has been very successfully prosecuting this useful work.

This brings to mind that Capt. Potter, in addition to the Bahama Islands as a field for winter service, had the county of New Hanover and eastern North Carolina which he traversed in spring and summer. But the last Legislature, by that unfortunate law laying a tax on the vending of books, summarily stopped his operations, and not only his, of course, but the operations of all colporteurs. We believe that in no other State in the Union is there a prohibitory tax on the sale of religious publications by colportage.

The late Methodist Conference appointed a committee to memorialize the next Legislature for a repeal of the law above referred to, and we have little doubt that the repeal will be accorded, or at least that the law will be so amended as not to interfere with the sale of religious publications by colportage.

We ought to say and we do most cheerfully say that the motive of the Legislature was in all probability a very proper one. The intention was no doubt to restrict the sale of the trashy and catchpenny publications of traveling book agents, who enter into competition with regular trade without paying taxes to which such trade is subject. In general we believe such book agents deserve little sympathy, but they ought to be clearly distinguished from colporteurs vending cheap religious literature.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

We not infrequently receive obituary or marriage notices unaccompanied by the name of the writer. Our rules require that we should have the name of the writer in every case. This will explain the non-appearance of some such communications recently.

Abstracts of the Majority and Minority Report of the Committee on Retrenchment and Reform have come in and we hear of some of our contemporaries having received a copy of the Revision of the Directory of Worship from the Revision Committee. As to this last we have not been favored. We understand, however, that the Committee cordially and earnestly invite criticism.

Rev. Messrs. John Leyburn, W. U. Murkland, John C. Backus and J. A. Lefevre have in view the raising of a "memorial fund" to be invested for the benefit of Rev. Dr. Plumer's two surviving daughters. It is proposed to place this fund in the hands of Rev. Peyton Harrison and Messrs. Hamilton Easter and W. W. Spence, to be managed and finally disposed of by them. Mrs. George Patterson and Mrs. Elizabeth C. Palmer of Baltimore have undertaken the burden of the work.

A gentleman sent his check for $250 to one of our contemporaries a short while back to pay for the paper to be sent to new subscribers. This he did, saying, "It is not a gift to the paper or its proprietors but to the persons who are to receive the paper." This puts it right. Now who will place in our hands any sums, great or small, to send the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN to persons who ought to have it, but are not able to pay for it? Usually about Christmas we have such funds placed at our disposal, whereby we are enabled to gladden the hearts of many who have few comforts, and none which they value more, perhaps, than the PRESBYTERIAN.

In a letter just received from a lady friend she says: "I don't think I have ever found the PRESBYTERIAN more interesting than it has been for some time, and I enjoy especially the editorials and the articles of Rev. W. S. Lacy and of Miss —— the young lady who writes from the North. A genuine, womanly, Southern girl, loving her own sunny home the more for the sorrows and desolations it has known; and independent enough to own it on all occasions. * * * These letters are just charming and I trust they may long continue. We think we know who writes them but are not sure."

Henry Bergh has demonstrated that he is a man of good, hard sense. At a meeting of Cooper Institute recently, of speakers who were to have been on hand to advocate more tenderness to criminals, only two appear. Mr. Bergh was called on and plainly expressed himself as not at all in favor coddling and petting of murderers and other criminals. His sympathies were with the virtuous, not the vicious. He would abolish penitentaries and establish the whipping posts. The Christian at Work reports him thus:

"Our present system encourages rather than deters crime, and he stated the well-known fact that prison life is made so agreeable, that hundreds commit crime so as to secure warm and clean accommodations with good food such as hard-working, honest men and women cannot get in our tenement-houses."

We suggest that if Mr. Bergh wants facts and figures to sustain him, and quite a number of persons to agree with him, he can find all in North Carolina.

It strikes us as strange that the Synod of Texas should decide that a Presbytery might enroll a church before its officers were elected. A Presbyterian church without at least one ruling elder is certainly an anomaly.

The same Synod called a meeting of the Presbytery of Central Texas to meet immediately after the adjournment of Synod. Due notice to the churches of course was not possible. The Synod of North Carolina declined a similar request after some discussion.

It will be seen that the ex thesi question will again be before the General Assembly on overture from the Synod of Texas. Shall we have it all over again?

In answer to an overture—the Synod of Missouri declared that the apostolic benedictions is a prayer, and by natural inference any one (for who can forbid prayer) may pronounce the benediction. The Synod of North Carolina on overture from Fayetteville Presbytery answered that "the apostolic benediction, being not of the form of a prayer, but a solemn blessing upon the people of God, in the name and by the authority of the Head of the Church, is a purely ministerial act." We cannot but think that the latter Synod is right.

From the report of receipts for the Howe Memorial Fund of Columbia Theological Seminary, we see that there were the following contributions from members of the Synod of North Carolina:

Rev. J. H. Thornwell	$500 00
" R. B. Anderson	10 00
" A. N. Ferguson	40 00

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

A letter from Rev. W. S. Lacy, says: "You will be grieved to hear of the affliction that has befallen Rev. James McQueen in the death of his oldest son Willie, who died on Wednesday, November 24th, 1880, at 1 o'clock A. M. Though he had reached nineteen years, and his mind was unusually acute and mature, having been an invalid nearly all his life, and having for the last few years been quite helpless from a spinal disease,—he seemed but a child. He bore his long confinement with great patience, was always cheerful and bright, was a great comfort to his parents, a lover of the Lord Jesus, of His word and of prayer, and accepted the discipline of the Heavenly Father with unmurmuring submission. He was buried from St. Andrew's on Thanksgiving day, and the poor emaciated body laid away to rest. "They sorrow, but not without hope."

FROM GEORGIA.

Rev. E. H. Briggs writes us:

For about seven months past Rev. Robert P. Kerr has been supplying the Church at Columbus, Ga. Recently a call was extended him to become its pastor. After several weeks consideration, Mr. Kerr, on last Sunday, December 5th, tendered his declinature of the call. He expects to leave during the second week in January next for Savannah, Ga., where he has been invited to become co-pastor with Dr. Axson of the Independent Presbyterian Church.

Columbus, Ga., Dec. 10, 1880.

FROM VIRGINIA.

Rev. W. B. Arrowood writes of churches in Giles county, Va.:

At our fall communion at Pearisburg, the second Sunday of October, two were received into that church on profession of faith; one, a little girl, a child of the covenant, and the other, from the Campbellite Church. The latter applied for baptism, and I baptized her according to the scriptural mode.

By appointment of Presbytery, I held a three days meeting, including the 5th Sunday in October, at Princeton, Mercer county, West Va. That little Presbyterian band seemed delighted to have their own preaching once more; marked attention was paid to the preaching of the word, and one was received into the church by profession of faith. We need a preacher to live and work in Mercer county, and could the Presbytery afford it, it would be money well spent to put one there.

Last Sunday we received three members into Hoge's Chapel, two on profession of faith and one by certificate from the Lutheran Church. Two others expected to join at the same time but were prevented from coming to church by sickness. They will join when I preach there again, and their children are to be baptized along with the father at the same time—a household baptism according to apostolic practice, the second of the kind in that church within less than a year. All the above are heads of families. They make nine received since last February into Hoge's Chapel, which has been organized only a little over two years. We feel very much encouraged in this part of our work, for which the Lord be praised.

Poplar Hill, Va., Dec. 9, 1880.

FROM ARKANSAS.

Rev. E. M. Munroe writes:

"We have recently had an interesting protracted meeting at Mt. Holly, Ark. Preaching continued for seven consecutive days, morning and night, with a short prayer meeting every morning before preaching. The pastor was assisted by Rev. A. Monk of the M. E. Church South, but the meeting was conducted strictly on Presbyterian principles and in accordance with the views of the pastor and session. God's people were anxious for a blessing, and they prayed earnestly for it, and their prayers were heard. During the meeting eighteen persons who were not professors of religion manifested an interest in their salvation by remaining in the church after the congregation had been dismissed, (according to the invitation of the pastor,) to converse with the ministers and elders about their soul's salvation. The hearts of others were touched who never manifested it in this way, with whom the pastor conversed privately. God's people were revived, and everybody present seemed to enjoy the meeting. It has, we trust, resulted in much good. We decided to wait a week or two before having a meeting of session to receive members, so the meeting was closed without having any additions. On last Sabbath (over two weeks after the protracted meeting closed) seven young persons were received into the church on profession of their faith, and others will doubtless join soon. E. M. M.

THE SYNOD OF ATLANTIC.

GREENSBORO, N. C., Dec. 7th, 1880.

Mr. Editor: The "Synod of Atlantic" met in the Second—i. e. the colored—Presbyterian church of Greensboro, on the first Wednesday of December, 1880, at 7.30 o'clock p. m., and adjourned Saturday night following, to meet next year in Columbia, S. C. Last year it met in Charlotte, N. C. I attended a number of the sessions of this body, and I feel impelled by a sense of duty, as well as by the satisfaction I experienced at what I saw and heard, to give publicity to my impressions. Some of the readers of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN are no doubt ready to ask, What is the "Synod of Atlantic," &c? I reply, it is a Synod connected with the Northern General Assembly, and has oversight of the churches and educational enterprises connected with the Northern Presbyterian Church, which are established in North and South Carolina, Florida and Georgia. The churches consist entirely of colored members (with the exception of perhaps one or two, if I am not mistaken, in Florida). The Presbyteries that constitute the Synod are Catawba, Yadkin, Atlantic, Fairfield and Knox. Their minutes of last year report 53 ministers, 127 churches, added on examination 908, added on certificate 214; whole number of communicants 9,650; number of Sabbath school scholars 8,235. It was this Synod that met last week in the colored Presbyterian church of Greensboro. Eight or ten of the ministers are white, all the rest are colored. At the recent meeting there were, counting their ruling elders, about 70 members. Their moderator was a white man, Rev. Mr. Waite; their two clerks were colored men. The largest part of this Synod is in North Carolina—81 or 82 churches out of the 127 are in this State, and nearly 5,000 of their members. They have a literary institution for colored youth, called "Biddle University," about a mile west of Charlotte, with English and normal, preparatory, collegiate and theological departments. Its faculty consists of four white ministers, with assistant teachers in the English department. They have about one hundred and fifty students. Rev. S. Mattoon, D.D., is President. They have also a large female seminary—called "Scotia Seminary" in Concord, N. C. They have there more than a hundred boarders, receiving instruction in all the branches usually taught in such schools and in domestic duties. This school has five teachers and three assistants. Rev. Luke Dorland is Superintendent, and if I am not mistaken both these institutions are owned by and are under the control of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church North. There are other schools—male and female,—in South Carolina and perhaps others besides the above in North Carolina. They have a semi-monthly paper called The Africo-American Presbyterian published in Wilmington, in this State. It is owned and edited by Rev. D. J. Sanders, a colored man. I formed his acquaintance, and was most favorably impressed with his ability, culture and spirit. He took a prize I was told for proficiency in Hebrew in his middle year in Allegheny Seminary, Pa. His paper is devoted to the educational, material, moral and religious interests of the colored people; from the specimens I have seen, it is admirably edited and is only $1 per annum. Sixteen of their churches in this State number from 100 to over 200 members. Their church in Greensboro that commenced some ten or twelve years ago with about thirty members from the white church is reported with 140 members. While I was at their different meetings I heard the subjects of Foreign Missions, Home Work, Sabbath Schools, Temperance &c., discussed by the colored preachers, and their views and presentation of the subjects would have done credit to any assembly. They expressed themselves well, and several with unusual propriety, beauty and force, I listened with surprise, delight and thankfulness. As hearers they are very impressible and demonstrative, and give expression to their feelings of assent by vocal utterances, "audible smiles," and applause. Indeed, at times, for a few moments, they seemed unusually merry for a Presbyterian synod. A paper was read by their Synodical Missionary, a colored preacher, that read as well as any paper of the sort. The temperance talks were admirable, and some speeches on "How to conduct Sabbath schools" and make Scripture study at once instructive, interesting and attractive were as good as we have anywhere. Several of our elders and deacons were present from time to time and some of our ladies—and all that I have heard speak of the subject, have expressed themselves as much pleased, as well as surprised. I feel very much like drawing some inferences from the foregoing and making some practical appeals, but I fear I have taken up already too much of your paper on a topic—that some may think rather foreign, or mal a propos. I said to some of the white ministers as I walked from the church with them, that I thought it spoke something of the former fidelity of the Synod of North Carolina, that they should find so many neighborhoods and local points where to organize their churches, so that out of 127 churches scattered over four states, more than 80 of them are gathered in North Carolina. And in Georgia, in Liberty county, where brother C. C. Jones of blessed memory lived, and labored, in slave times, there is now a church reported with about 500 members. Dr. Jones rests and "his works do follow" him. I could but feel that the great need of the freedmen, (ages and of all,) are the elevating and conservative influences of Presbyterianism. What lessons and appeals of rebuke and of duty do these things utter to us.

J. HENRY SMITH.

A FRIENDLY REMONSTRANCE.

CHAPEL HILL, Dec. '80.

When the "bushel measure" which has long availed to eclipse the merits and hide the light of a literary institution is removed, it ought to be foreseen that the sudden illumination consequent upon such removal would be likely to damage unprepared optics. It were to be wished that Dr. Hepburn had been more cautious in his unveiling of Davidson College at Synod. Our friend "R. B." has certainly been a little blinded by excess of light on that occasion, and fails to put things in the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN of Nov. 24th with his usual clearness and fairness and moderation.

A good many of us have known this long while that there was a good college at Davidson. Since it seems there must be church nurseries for boys as well as for girls, we have always been proud of our Presbyterian nursery; proud of its standing, its scholarship, its usefulness, and its modesty. Never once did it occur to us that a "bushel measure," if applied, would be sufficient to obscure its merits. Nor even now, since we are informed that the bushel has really been taken off, do we see in the points on which the dazzled eyes of "R. B." are riveted, any specially fresh claim to our confidence and admiration.

"R. B." is in a transport of delight over the "culture" of the Faculty of Davidson. Nobody questions this culture, but it need not be any particular recommendation to North Carolinians that three-fourths of the Faculty "represent the culture of Virginia colleges," one "represents" the culture of Georgia, and one of a New York "school." Not one represents North Carolina either in birth or in training. Are we to throw up our caps for that?

This present writer is not prepared to endorse the sentiment so triumphantly insinuated that the "culture" of a professor in any given college in North Carolina is all the finer for having been gained in some other State. It used to be the case that we were compelled to send North for teachers of both sexes, but that was long since. We have taken to raising them from native stock in some part of North Carolina "since the war," and have found that it answers quite as well, if not better.

Nor is our breath to be taken away by the further blast of the trumpet that so defiantly announces the "culture" of Berlin, and Leipsic and Gottingen and Heidelberg and Paris as represented at Davidson. European Ph. D.'s have shone above our North Carolina horizon in other places than Davidson. We have had opportunity to take observation of not a few since the war. And "R. B." should know that there have been at least two North Carolina professors in the State University who represented "European culture" before the war, besides several real, actual Frenchmen. And after the war Prof. Hepburn took a furlough from the Trustees of the University, and went to Germany for a year. Not that he claimed very much for that amount of gain, on his return. There are two of the instructors in the University now, who can say as much. Several German experts have been employed in the University laboratories by the Agricultural Experimental Station under Dr. Ledoux. Their performances with our language, after several years residence in America, were impressive, and suggestive.

It does not require a particularly vivid imagination to present the average American student with the average American acquaintance with European languages, wrestling with the German tongue in a German lecture room or laboratory, for one year; nor a very nice judgment to calculate his progress in science at the end of that time. In the case of exclusive devotion to some speciality, the technicalities of a foreign language may no doubt be mastered to some extent within a twelve-month. But is this one year's fumbling round a German University to represent "European culture," and be held up as worth more than ten or twenty or thirty year's work at home? None will be more ready to smile at such a claim than the one year Ph. D.'s themselves.

"Broad and thorough culture" is a handsome phrase. It means, as every scholar knows, a good deal that can be gained at home, and it means a good deal that can be got without going outside of North Carolina, as nobody knows better than "R. B." himself. Nobody at any rate affords a better proof it. Not that there is not much to be gained from foreign study and foreign travel, but American scholarship needs less and less every year to be "a borrower in the European market;"—and it is a sign of immaturity or decrepitude when a people make a foreign school and foreign teachers their boast and dependance.

And what are we to understand by the meaning emphasis with which "R. B." assures us "there is no breeding in and in done at Davidson College.

If it means to suggest that a college does well not to choose its faculty from among its alumni then it must be said that neither facts nor experience sustain such a position. North Carolinians are the most suitable guardians of their own institutions—civil and literary. And if a North Carolina professor brings to the college he serves the peculiar love and pride and undying interest which all the world knows that old students feel for their Alma Mater, then, other things being equal, this one qualification must doubly fit him for his work. Who cares for the Old North State as a North Carolinian can? Who understands the points and needs of a college so well as one of its own graduates? It must be an exceptional advantage when an institution of learning is able to choose its best officers from among its own sons,—and when it has furnished such teachers as the Binghams, the Horners, the Graves, the Hoopers, not to mention scores of names eminent in all the learned professions, why really it might be said to stand in its own light if it does not turn to them for an occasional contribution to its Faculty. To the neglect of this sound policy the "bushel measure" that has so long retarded the growth of Davidson, has been thought by some to owe its existence.

If by "breeding in and in" "R. B." should mean us to infer that the father should not be succeeded by the son in his work, then again we must differ from him. Facts are against his theory. We need go no further than our own fine North Carolina Bingham school to refute it. "Breeding in and in" for three generations has achieved a success there that might well prevail to bring the process into fashion if it were not.

As to the tests of the work done at Davidson shown by the high standing of its graduates abroad, we rejoice in them and are proud of them both as being North Carolinian and Presbyterian. Such news should stir no other feelings but those of gratification and generous emulation. The success of one in the field of letters is the success of all.

There is good material at Davidson College. There is a first-rate Faculty, and there are well-raised, thoughtful, ambitious boys there. And too, there is a strong religious influence brought to bear;—and religion of the very best sort, that sort which cheers on to hard and conscientious work, and the highest aims, and yet "excludes boasting." Presbyterians need never brag, nor call upon their friends to do it for them—least of all invidiously, or injudiciously.

Charles Lamb said finely: We should be modest for a modest man. C. P. S.

Life as we call it, is nothing but the edge of the boundless ocean of existence.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Scribner & Co. send their bound volume of Scribner's Monthly, including the serial numbers from November to May. The volume is elegantly, not gaudily, bound in green cloth, and needs, to those who know the value of this magazine, no commendation from us. It would make a fine holiday present.

But speaking of holiday presents, the bound St. Nicholas is just the very best going for the young people. With lots of genuine fun St. Nicholas gives a large amount of the very choicest instruction. We know of nothing to compare with the St. Nicholas two volumes for the year November 1879, to November 1880. Bright and attractive, too, it is in binding—red and gold.

Speaking of publications which will so inform interested readers as to enable them to keep up with the literature issuing from the press, and give them short, clear and piquant critical reviews of such as is worthy of note—we say speaking of such guiding and informing publications we shall name as first on the list "Good Literature" published by the American Book Exchange, monthly at 50 cents per annum.

Mashallah! whatever that may mean. But Mashallah! a Flight into Egypt is one of Appleton's Handy Volume Series, by Charles W. Stoddard. A very entertaining book it is. It will carry you along pleasantly with the writer through the cities Cairo, Alexandria, &c., and among the Pyramids, the mosques and kiosques, the temples and the tombs. Price 30 cents.

Nothing short of an exact, not to say a critically exact, review of "Studies in the Mountain Instruction" could do justice to its merits. Rev. Dr. Geo. Dana Boardman, has just closed (Nov. 30th) his lectures on the "Mountain Instruction"—on the Sermon on the Mount in other words—and embodied them in book form. We propose a more extended review when the book has been read, meanwhile we do not fear to recommend both for instruction and interest this work from the author of the "Creative Week."

D. Appleton & Co. send us the Orthoepist by Alfred Ayres. Very good, no doubt, for those who wish to engage in the study of Orthoepy.

Common Sense in the Household: A Manual of Practical Housewifery. By Marion Harland. 1881. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.

The mistress in our home, who is good authority, says this is a capital book. Moreover, 100,000 copies have been sold, which is the largest sale of any publication by Scribners in the same time. The plates becoming worn and the demand increasing, a revised and enlarged edition, from new plates, is now issued and the price reduced from $2.25 to $1.75.

A Popular Commentary on the New Testament. By English and American Scholars of various Evangelical Denominations, with Illustrations and Maps. Edited by Philip Schaff, D. D., L.L. D. Vol. 2. The Gospel of John and the Acts. $6.00. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. 1880.

Prof. Wm. Milligan, D. D. of the University of Aberdeen, and Prof. W. F. Moulton of DeLees College, Cambridge, prepare the Commentary on John, and Dean Howson of Chester, with Canon Spence of London, that on Acts. The Introductions are ably judicious, and the Commentary manifests great care and presents the points of the latest scholarship. The text of the authorized version is printed in bold type in paragraph form; various readings are given at the bottom of the page, with full marginal references, and literal renderings. So far as our critical examination has gone, we are satisfied of the general accuracy and great merit of this volume, though there must be points on which differences will occur, as in Dean Howson's inference from Acts xx: 17 in favor of Episcopacy after, though not during, St Paul's life.

From I. K. Funk & Co., we have Christmas Books of their Standard Series. Two volumes 25 cents each. These contain "A Christmas Carol," "The Chimes," "The Cricket on the Hearth," "The Battle of Life" and "The Haunted Man," all well known works by Charles Dickens.

Endymion. There's no preface to tell us what the book proposes and we have not time to read up on it now; but this much we say, it is from D'Israeli, the Earl of Beaconsfield, author of "Lothair," &c. Published by D. Appleton & Co. Our friend, the Southern Presbyterian, says the rest: "Endymion is Disraeli's latest novel. It is understood to be a review of his political career. The great statesmen and leading characters of his time are supposed to be presented in these pages, drawn by a pencil that never shrinks from depicting the worst phase of an enemy's character. You will find Napoleon III, Cobden, Palmerston, Cardinal Manning, Gladstone, and all the rest. The sensation produced in England by the announcement of Endymion was so great that the London Times is said to have offered $1000 for proof-sheets of it."

From Death into Life or twenty years of my ministry, by Rev. W. Haslam (late incumbent of Curzan Chapel May fair), Author of "Bilding from the Top." "Twenty-four Tales of conversion," "The Three-fold Gift of God," &c.

D. Appleton & Company, New York.

This book in a fresh and interesting way delineates the author's religious experience, a minister of the Church of England—high Churchman—and very zealous ritualist, discovers after ministering four years in holy things his want of real spiritual life, is converted and becomes an earnest and successful preacher of the Gospel as it is in Jesus. The successful point in this book is the direction clearly and sharply drawn between the Religions as distinguished from the Spiritual life. And whilst we differ with the author upon some doctrinal points, as a whole we approve his book as very interesting and calculated to do much good.

MONTHLY REVIEW OF MISSIONS.

Our latest communications from Brazil are dated Campinas, October 1st, Mogy-Mirim the same, and from Pernambuco October 9th. Mr. and Mrs. Wardlaw had reached Pernambuco safely and in good health, and were located in the suburbs of the city, with the view of devoting themselves to the study of the language. Campinas had been visited the week before by a hail-storm of unprecedented violence. Miss Henderson remarks, in relation to it: "It came up suddenly, like a mighty rushing wind, and in five minutes had smashed into tiny fragments over one hundred and seventy-five window-panes in the College Church, and when we opened the door of this house the hail-stones were nearly two inches deep outside, and the ground as white as it would be after a fall of snow. The next morning hail-stones were picked up an inch and a half in diameter. Birds, snakes, frogs, and chickens roosting in the trees were killed in great numbers. Fruit-trees and gardens were whipped to pieces. I hope never to see anything like it again."

Mr. Boyle, in his letter from Mogy-Mirim, mentions that there were in the community around him a number of serious inquirers about the way of life.

We have a letter from Mr. Stuart, of the Haugchow Mission, of the 17th September, in which he states: "I am very glad to say that we are all well, and that all the departments of the work are moving along in a very satisfactory manner. Mr. Painter is expected home in a few days. We expect the mail due here day after to-morrow to bring us definite word regarding the sailing of Mr. Sydenstricker, and when we may expect him in Shanghai."

CIRCULATION OF THE MISSIONARY.

The month of December is the most favorable time to extend the circulation of THE MISSIONARY; first for renewing old subscriptions, and second, for obtaining new ones. We invite all friends of the missionary cause to aid in this matter. Young men, young ladies, and even boys and girls, as we know from past experience, can render effective service in giving this little magazine a wide circulation. The General Assembly has recommended it again and again to our Christian people. At its last meeting it was strongly urged that a copy of it should be found in every family within our bounds. The same thing has been repeatedly enjoined by almost all our Presbyteries and Synods. We know not how to accounnt for the existing apathy in relation to it, except in the low state of missionary interest so predominant among us. But is it not time to awake from this indifference? Is it not time for us to engage hearts and hand in the work assigned to us by the Great Head of the Church? This we shall not do until we know more about the condition and wants of this great cause. It is the design of THE MISSIONARY to impart the very kind of information needed. We call upon all of our friends, therefore, to aid in its circulation. Whatever is done in this way is so much done to promote the honor and glory of the Redeemer and the salvation of a lost world.—Missionary.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

PRESBYTERIAN (SOUTH).

We learn from the Staunton (Va.) Vindicator that on Sabbath, Dec. 5th, six persons were admitted into the membership of the First Presbyterian church of which Rev. W. E. Baker is pastor. Rev. Frank McCutchan, of Waynesboro, preached the ante-communion sermon.

On November 16th, Rev. H. W. Flinn was installed pastor of the Presbyterian church at West Point, Miss. Rev. T.M. Lowry, of Aberdeen, Miss., presided and propounded the constitutional questions, and delivered the charge to the people. Rev. J. William Flinn, of New Orleans, preached the sermon and charged the pastor. Rev. H. W. Flinn has just entered the ministry, after spending nearly two sessions at Columbia, S. C., and two at Princeton; and a promising career of usefulness is open before him in the very interesting field where he now labors. He was installed a few weeks before at Okolona, Miss.; and both his churches have life and zeal in them. We hope that the union which has been established between pastor and people, will, under God's blessing, result in a large, permanent growth of piety and strength for these vines of the Lord's planting.—Southwestern Presbyterian.

A house of worship was dedicated at Jamestown, N. C., on November 28th. Rev. Messrs. C. H. Wiley and P. H. Dalton conducted the services. The building, which is neat and well painted, is paid for.

The Christian Observer reports five additions to Rev. Dr. Hendricks' church at Paducah, Ky., and four additions to the First church at Louisville, Ky.

Rev. N. Keff Smith writes to the Christian Observer, concerning the Third church, Atlanta, Ga: "We have about raised a sufficient amount to build a basement for our Sabbath school, and a session and pastor's rooms. Our friends in the city are helping us nobly; one friend in New York gave us $100."

The following changes of postoffice addresses are noted: The address of Rev. R. B. Morrow from Durant, Holmes county, Miss., to West, Holmes county, Miss., and the address of Rev. Ben Helm from Elizabethtown, Ky., to Carrollton, Ky.

Persons in want of Temperance Publications, to read up on the progress and prospects of Prohibition or aught else in this line of moral reform, will do well to address J. N. Stearns, Publishing Agent of the National Temperance Society, 58 Reade street, New York.

In publishing advertisement "What we Owe" we are requested to call special attention to it as a means of doing good. There is no catch or clap-trap, no business interest to be subserved. We say this knowingly. The object of the advertiser is simply to do good.

MARTIN LUTHER AND THE ROLL.

After a time of great trial, Luther tells us he was seeking rest in sleep; and he saw as sleep came to him—in his dream he saw—Satan standing at the foot of his bed. And Satan jeeringly said to him: "Martin, thou art a pretty Christian! Hast thou got the impudence to assume that thou art a Christian?" "Yes," said Martin, "I am a Christian, Satan; because Christ has allowed me, as any sinner may, to come to Him." "What!" said Satan, "thou a Christian? Then art a pretty Christian, Martin! See what thou hast done!" And Satan took a roll and began to unroll it; and there at its head Martin Luther saw some sins set down that had passed away in the dim distance of childhood. He had forgotten them. Martin sank as it struck his sight, but the roll was unrolled, leaf after leaf, foot after foot, and, to his horror, he saw sin after sin he never knew anything about at all, written down there, complete in every detail—an awful list; and in his dream, he says, the sweat of mortal agony stood on his brow. He thought, "In truth, Satan has got right on his side. Can such a sinner as this be just with God?" He said, "Unroll it! unroll it!" and Satan jeeringly unrolled it, and Luther thought it would never end. At last he came nearly to the end, and, in desperation, he cried, "Let us see the end!" But, as the last foot of the paper rolled out, he caught sight of some writing, red as blood, at the end, and his eye caught the words, "The blood of Jesus Christ, His son, cleanseth us from all sin." And the vision of Satan floated away, and Luther says he went to sleep. Ah, yes, dear friends, that is it. The Saviour deigns to wash away even the unknown defilements of His child's soul. "The blood of Jesus Christ, His Son, cleanseth from all sin."

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. AN ONLY DAUGHTER CURED OF CONSUMPTION.

When death was hourly expected, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting with the many herbs of Calcutta, he accidentally made a preparation which cured his only child of Consumption. His child is now in this country and enjoying the best of health. He has proved to the world that Consumption can be positively and permanently cured. The Doctor now gives this Recipe free, only asking two green stamps to pay expenses. This Herb also cures night-sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold up in twenty-four hours. Address CRADDOCK & CO., 1032 Race St., Philadelphia, naming this paper.

Clergymen, Bankers, Book-keepers, editors and others that lead sedentary lives, will find much relief from headaches, nervousness and constipation engendered from want of exercise, by taking Simmons Regulator. It is a harmless vegetable compound, and numbers who have tried it will confidently assert that it is the best remedy that can be used. It expels humors of the blood, cleanses the liver, restores the kidneys to healthy action and drives out the despondency and gloom of ill health. The patient soon feels as if he had taken a new lease of life, and is overjoyed to find the depressed feeling dissipated, the costive habits corrected and new streams of health coursing through his veins.

"Simmons Liver Regulator is a valuable remedy for Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Torpid Liver, Constipation, Piles and such like diseases.

"W. S. HOLT,
"President of S. W. R. R. Co., of Georgia."

Dr. Ayers' Laboratory, that has done such wonders for the sick now issues a potent restorer for the beauty of mankind—for the comeliness which advancing age is so prone to diminish and destroy. His VIGOR mounts luxuriant locks on the bald and gray pates among us, and thus lays us under obligations to him for the good looks as well as health as the community.

In Gaston county, Nov. 27th, 1880, Dr. JOHN McLEAN, in the 89th year of his age.

He was engaged in the practice of medecine about sixty years. During that long period of time he remained in the same neighborhood, had a good practice and enjoyed the utmost confidence of the people. In his afflictions, the ministering servant of God was so cordially received that he felt it pleasant to visit him. Repeatedly he expressed faith in his Heavenly Physician and a hope of a blessed immortality.

In Rowan county, N. C., Nov. 21st, 1880, Mr. JAMES M NEAL, in the 26th year of his age.

Before his last earthly Sabbath had closed, he entered upon that eternal Sabbath at God's right hand, "where there are pleasures forevermore."

"Go to thy rest, and while
Our thought our sorrow shall beguile
For soon, with a celestial smile,
We meet to part no more." J. A. R.

In Bladen county, Nov. 5th, 1880, of pneumonia, JOHN FREDERICK CROOM, son and only child of John F. and Henrietta Croom, age 2 years and 12 days

On the morning of Dec. 4th, 1880 at the residence of her husband, near Cameron, Mrs. FLORA M. WORTHY, wife of S B Worthy, and daughter of D. McIntyre.

Her only child (an infant daughter) preceded her in the early summer, her mother in the summer of 1879, her brother and sister in the summer of 1877—all members of the Church or children of the Covenant. Bereaved and sorrowing friends take comfort in the promise.

Near Franklin, N C., Nov. 29th, 1880, WILLIE McDOWELL, aged 10 years.

Willie was a great sufferer from infancy, and under Christian training learned to recognize the hand of God in his afflictions. As a result of this recognition he learned great patience and submitted to the stroke without murmuring. Willie, peaceful, quiet and thoughtful beyond his years, has gone to rest with four little brothers and sisters. M. R. K.

In Mecklenburg county, N. C, on 21st of November, 1880, Mrs. HANNAH GRIER NEEL, in the 79th year of her age, wife of Gen. W. H. Neel and daughter of Lenas and Margaret Alexander.

Mrs Neel expired on her husband's 81st birthday, and had she lived four days longer would have reached the 61st anniversary of their marriage. They brought up a large family of children, all of whom were married. Mrs. Neel was a great sufferer the last ten years of her life, which she bore with Christian patience and fortitude. She was a consistent member of Steele Creek Presbyterian church for more than sixty years, and was eminently a devoted Christian wife and mother. May her children and others imitate her godly life and example.

A. N. G.

JANE E. CAMERON departed this life Dec. 4th, 1880, aged 51 years.

The evening of her death she sat up until a late hour in the night reading her Bible, as was her usual practice. After closing the Book, she conversed cheerfully for some minutes, and then making an effort to rise from her chair, fell and expired almost instantly.

In all her ways she acknowledged her Saviour, and His name was ever uppermost in her mind. She was a consistent Christian lady, a member of the M. E. Church South, but the greatest of all was her charity. She was an affectionate daughter, a kind sister and a true friend, always ready at the bedside of the afflicted. Yes, she will be missed by her many friends, for no one knew her but to love her. May the living take warning from this sudden visitation of Providence.

We miss her now! She's gone
To that bright world above,
To sing around the heavenly throne
Of Jesus and His love.

At her home, in Buffalo congregation, Oct. 27th, 1880, in the 26th year of her age, Mrs. ELLEN GILMOUR McIVER, wife of Columbus E. McIver, and daughter of Matthew Gilmour, Esq., of Chatham county.

Death seldom comes on sadder errand than when, as in this instance, he takes one who was a loving wife, a dutiful daughter and a devoted sister, to the narrow home appointed for all the living. The day she died, her little babe, ten days old, was laid away, and the day after she was placed by its side. She was so full of life, of animal spirits, of energy, hope and industry—she was so happy in her new home, and gave such promise of a life of usefulness and influence, that it seems as if such as she should not and could not be taken. But God knows best.

Mrs McIver was of Scotch birth and training. Her father removed from Scotland with his family less than ten years ago, and has been settled about eight years in Buffalo congregation. She united with Buffalo church on profession of faith more than two years ago, and has "witnessed a good confession." She was married Dec. 25th, 1879, and so soon her brief life has closed! A large congregation attended the funeral from Buffalo church, attesting the widespread sympathy and sincere sorrow of the community.

How sad it seems when viewed from earth. Yet God's time is best. In her earnest and happy disposition, her growing likeness of the Divine image, and her constant usefulness, friends and the dearest of earth took increasing delight. When God places still higher honor on His own, and calls to Himself the loved of earth, should any one murmur? "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus shall God bring with Him."

Asleep in Jesus! far from thee
Thy kindred and their graves may be,
But there is still a blessed sleep
From which none ever wake to weep.

Arousing its Readers.

An alarm of fire at midnight is a startling thing, but not half so startling to many who hear it as would be the sudden knowledge of their own dangerous physical condition. Thousands of thousands are hurrying to their graves because they are carelessly indifferent to the insidious inroads of disease and the means of cure. It is the mission of H. H. Warner & Co., with their Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, to arouse men to a sense of their danger and then cure them.—Memphis Appeal.

Weekly Courier-Journal.

THE Publishers of the Louisville COURIER-JOURNAL claim that for the quantity and quality of matter published and the care taken in preparing each issue, it is by odds the best and cheapest paper in the United States.

The COURIER-JOURNAL is a consolidation of the Louisville Courier, Louisville Journal and Louisville Democrat, and is now in its fiftieth year. Being a long established and thoroughly responsible paper, occupying its own property, worth over $500,000, and having the most costly machinery and ample means, subscribers in making advance payments for it do not run the risk of losing their money, as is too often the case in papers that have a precarious existence of only a few years.

Rare inducements in the way of cash commissions and valuable premiums are offered agents, postmasters and club raisers who send subscriptions to the WEEKLY COURIER JOURNAL. No traveling agents are employed by the Courier Journal Co., as we desire at every place local agents known to the community they reside in, and to whom will be sent, on application, free of charge, an agents' outfit of sample copies, posters, blanks and circulars, giving list of premiums and cash commissions we offer.

Subscribers can, by taking advantage of our premium list, secure any one of the leading periodicals of the day, a handsome book, or some other valuable premium, for a very small amount of money. Our list of premiums to all subscribers who send us Two Dollars will be found to be worthy of especial attention.

Specimen copies and full descriptive circulars will be sent free of charge to any one on application. Subscription terms, postage free, are—for Daily, $12; Sunday, $2; Weekly, with premium, $2; without premium, $1 50.

Any one sending four yearly subscribers and six dollars will be entitled to an extra copy of the Weekly Courier-Journal one year, free to any address. Address,

Littell's Living Age.

In 1881 THE LIVING AGE enters upon its thirty-eighth year, admittedly unrivalled and continuously successful. During the year it will furnish to its readers the productions of the most eminent authors, above-named and many others; embracing the choicest Serial and Short Stories by the Leading Foreign Novelists, and an amount in the world, of the most valuable Literary and Scientific matter of the day, from the pens of the foremost Essayists, Scientists, Critics, Discoverers, and Editors, representing every department of Knowledge and Progress.

Unapproached by any other Periodical

THE LIVING AGE is a weekly magazine giving more than

THREE AND A QUARTER THOUSAND

The importance of THE LIVING AGE to every American reader, as the only satisfactorily fresh and COMPLETE compilation of an indispensable current literature,—indispensable because it embraces the productions of

THE ABLEST LIVING WRITERS, is sufficiently indicated by the following recent Opinions.

"In no other form can so much thoroughly good reading be got for so little money: in no other form can so much instruction and entertainment be got in so small a space."—Philadelphia Times.

"There is no other publication like it. It is known and read by all who desire to keep abreast with the cultivated thought of the English-speaking world."—Episcopal Register, Philadelphia.

"It enables the reader, at trifling expense, considering the quantity and quality of the reading furnished, to keep pace with the best thought and literary work of our time."—Christian Union, New York.

"There is no diminution in the value and interest of this now venerable eclectic, or in the skill and discrimination shown in its editing."—Boston Journal.

"It is, by all odds, the best eclectic published."—Southern Churchman.

"It reproduces so fully the choicest articles from the foreign magazines, that one who takes it does not feel the need of anything else in the way of foreign periodical literature."—The Advance, Chicago.

"Gives the best of all at the price of one."—New York Independent.

"Its frequent issue and ample space enable it to give all that the very ablest of living writers furnish to periodical literature on science, history, biography, philosophy, poetry, theology, politics and criticism, and to add to this the full complement of the best that there is in fiction."—The Interior, Chicago.

"Teems with the choicest literature of the day."—New York Tribune.

"The best of magazines to subscribe to."—Gazette, Montreal.

"Comparatively speaking, the cheapest magazine published."—Commercial Advertiser, Detroit.

"We know of no investment of eight dollars, in the world of literature, that will yield equal returns."—The Presbyterian, Philadelphia.

"With it alone a reader may fairly keep up with all that is important in the literature, history, politics and science of the day."—The Methodist, New York.

"It has no rival."—New York Evening Post.

Published WEEKLY at $8.00 a year, free of postage.

FOR THE FAMILY.

Never Despair.

If I in would impress on
Tne weary and sad
The truth of a lesson
In metaphor clad.

Innocent merriment
Shortens the mile;
Try the experiment
Once in a while.

Face your foes fearlessly,
"Never say die"—
Trials ta'en carelessly,
Lightsomely lie.

Our teardrops are lenses
That magnify ills;
They cozen our senses
Till hillocks seem hills.

And faces grow wrinkled,
While tresses with gray
Grow speedily sprinkled
When woe has her way.

Horrors may haunt you, but
Foul may grow fair.
Dangers may daunt you, but
"Never despair."

Verily, verily,
Judge as you may,
He who toils merrily
Carries the day. —Selected.

A Boy Emigrant.

Many years ago, when Peter the Great was Czar of Russia, and when the improvements that he was making all over the country gave foreign workmen a fine chance of earning high wages, a number of emigrants landed one cold winter morning at one of the Russian ports on the Gulf of Finland, to see if they could find work, as so many others had done.

A curious mixture they were—men women and children from every country on either side of the Baltic. Tall, fresh-colored Swedes, in gray frocks and thick blue stockings; stout, light-haired Germans, and ruddy, blue-eyed Danes; big-boned Pomeranians, with low foreheads and shaggy brown beards; and short, squat Finns, whose round puffy faces and thick yellow hair gave them the look of over-boiled apple dumplings.

But their first taste of Russia was not at all a pleasant one. At the port where they had landed it was the rule that all emigrants who came ashore should be kept in one place till the Czar's agent came to examine them; and the place where they were kept was an old warehouse, very bare and dismal looking, with nothing in it but a few old sails and some heaps of straw. Here they remained for two days, while the snow fell and the wind roared outside, their food being brought them by the soldiers of the port. The men smoked their pipes and played cards, the women knitted stockings or mended the clothes of their husbands and children, while the little people played bide-and-seek in and out of the dark corners, and made the gloomy old place quite merry with their shouts and laughter.

But there was only one boy (a bright-eyed little fellow, with brown curly hair) who took no part in the fun, but sat in a corner by himself, chalking curious figures on the wall, which he seemed to copy from the book in his other hand. Any one who had looked closely at these figures would have seen that they were letters—Russian letters—and that sometimes he would write a whole word at once, and then put the meaning opposite it in German. In fact, he was teaching himself the language of this new country he had got into, and seemed to be pretty well on with it, for every now and then he would leave off writing and read a page of his book, without meeting a single word he could not master.

"Look at Karl Osterman yonder, slaving away at that book of his!" said one of the men. "Much good that'll do him! As if one could saw a plank or hammer a rivet any better for knowing that crack-jaw lingo!"

"He's going to teach the Russians their own language—that's what he's at!" grinned another. "A regular professor, ain't he? far too clever for poor fellows like us!"

"Ay, he'll be a great man one of these days," chimed in a third, with a hoarse laugh, "and then, perhaps he'll be kind enough to give us a job."

Little Karl's eyes sparkled, and he set his lips firmly, as if making up his mind that he would be a great man yet somehow or other, but he said nothing and went quietly on with his work. Suddenly the door flew open, and in came a Russian soldier in a shabby green uniform, trimmed with faded gold lace. He was a very tall and powerful man, with a dark, weather-beaten face, framed in closely-cropped hair, and great black eyes that seemed to pierce right through any one whom they looked at.

"I say, my good fellows," he cried, "here's an order from the Czar, which I'm to paste up in this room; and I want to have it in German and Swedish as well as Russian, that every one who comes in may be able to read it. Perhaps one of you would kindly lend me a helping hand with the job, for I'm not very glib with foreign languages myself."

The men glanced meaningly at each other, and the two who had been making fun of Osterman looked rather sheepish, as if thinking that they had better been learning Russian themselves instead of laughing at him.

"I'll do it for you, Mr. Soldier," said little Osterman, stepping boldly forward, "if there aren't any very big words in it. I've only got as far as three-syllable words in Russian yet, you know."

The soldier started at him for a moment, and then began to laugh.

"Well, my boy, I don't think you'll find many big words on this paper; it's pretty plain sailing as far as it goes. See if you can read it."

Karl took the paper and read it off easily enough.

"Well done, my fine fellow!" cried the Russian; "you're a smart lad for your age. I can see that. Now try if you can put it into German."

To work went our hero, with a look as solemn as any professor on his little round face. Once or twice he stopped as if at a loss for a word; but he got through at last, and having finished the German, began upon the Swedish.

"What? do you know Swedish, too?" cried the new friend. "Why, man, you're a perfect dictionary!"

"My mother was a Swede," answered Osterman, "and she taught me her own language; and my father was a German, and he taught me his."

"You're a lucky fellow!" said the Russian, with a sigh, "I only wish I'd had some one to teach me when I was of your age, I should know a great deal more than I do."

"What? didn't your father teach you then?"

"He died when I was a mere child," said the Russian, sadly, "and my mother, too."

"Oh dear, I'm so sorry! But had you no brothers and sisters?"

"I had a brother, but he was blind, poor fellow, and couldn't help me; and as for my sister," (here his face darkened fearfully,) "instead of being kind to me, she tried to have me killed!"

"What a shame!" cried the boy, indignantly, clinching a fist about the size of a large plum. "I only wish I'd been your brother!—I wouldn't have let anybody touch you!"

This valiant promise of protection made by a tiny boy to a stalwart soldier of six feet three, tickled the other emigrants so much that they burst into a roar of laughter which made the old walls ring. But the soldier did not laugh; he only passed his hand tenderly over the child's curly head, and then stooped to look at the book which Karl had been reading.

"Ah! the story of Ilia, the Strong. I used to be very fond of it when I was a boy. How do you like it?"

"Very much indeed. I didn't think I'd have time to finish it, when they said the Czar was coming to look at us; but I suppose he is too busy amusing himself to care about us poor fellows."

The soldier gave such a terrible frown that the man nearest him started back in dismay, and even Osterman himself looked startled. But the next moment the Russian's face cleared again, though he was still very sad.

"You shouldn't talk like that, my boy," said he; "the Czar would have come to you directly after you landed, if he hadn't been ill. However, he's well again now, and I shouldn't wonder if you were to see him here to-day."

Just then the door opened again, and in trampled a dozen grand-looking officers in splendid uniforms, the foremost of whom, making a low bow to the shabby soldier, said, very respectfully, "All is ready, your majesty."

At the word "majesty," all the emigrants started as if they had been shot; for they now saw that this shabby looking fellow, whom they had taken for a common soldier was no other than the Czar, Peter the Great himself. But little Osterman did not seem frightened in the least. He slid his soft little hand into the Emperor's huge brown fist, and cried, joyfully;

"I'm so glad you're a good Czar, after all, for the Czars that I've read about were very bad fellows, indeed, and I know I shouldn't have liked them."

"Well, well, my boy," said Peter, clapping him on the shoulder, with a hearty laugh, "I hope you'll find me a little better than some of them, even though I am an Emperor. Come along with me and I'll find you something better to do than chalking an old wall."

The boy went with his new friend, and any history of Russia will tell you how high Osterman rose, and what great things he accomplished. Peter the Great made him his secretary; the Empress Catherine I. made him chamberlain, and the Czar Peter II. gave him a title of honor; and before the Empress Anne had been many years on the throne the little student whom his comrades had laughed at in the old warehouse thirty years before had become Count Osterman, Prime Minister of Russia.

How Love Removed a Mountain.

"Mamma," said Arthur, "how can faith remove mountains?"

"I will tell you how love once removed a mountain," said his mother, "and then you will perhaps understand what is now puzzling you:

"More than a hundred and twenty years ago there was born in an old castle on the shores of the Pentland Firth, in the far north of Scotland, a boy who, when he grew up, became a very useful man. His mother was one of a noble family, and he inherited a title himself. He was Sir John Sinclair, but far better than titles and wealth was the training the mother gave to her son. She taught him—for his father died when he was young—how to manage wisely his estates; and as he grew up he showed that he did not intend to live a selfish, luxurious life, but to do his best for his neighbors and his country. At that time good roads were very much needed, even in the more busy parts of England; and in the north of Scotland, where the inhabitants were few, and for the most part poor, the roads were often very bad.

"One day a neighbor asked Sir John when he would make a road over Ben Cheilt—a large mountain which interfered much with freedom of travelling in Caithness. He was not prepared to begin a road over Ben Cheilt just then, but the time came soon after. He went to London on a visit, and there saw a young lady whom he wished to marry, but when he asked her to go with him to Caithness she shook her head. She liked Sir John, but in those days of slow traveling and dear postage the distance between Thurso and London seemed immense, and Miss Maitland could not make up her mind to go so far from home. However, she did not altogether refuse him, and he went back to Thurso resolved that the big mountain, Ben Cheilt, should no longer stand in the way of a direct road to the south. He surveyed it carefully, made up his mind what to do, and then sent out over the country for all the men that could be got to help him. One summer morning, at early dawn, one thousand two hundred and sixty men assembled under his command, and by nightfall the old bridle-track was made into a carriage road. Before he could go south again, a gentleman who had just been traveling in Scotland, carried to Miss Maitland the story of Sir John's road-making, and all his other improvements, and she was so much pleased that she determined to reward him in the way he wished. They were married soon afterwards.

"That was not Sir John's only effort. He lived to be an old man, to do a great deal for Scotland, and to be much respected. And now, Arthur, you see how love can remove mountains."

"What? didn't your father teach you then?"

"He didn't remove it, mamma; he only made a way over it," said Arthur.

"And what more was needed?" answered his mamma. "God does not take mountains out of our way altogether in this world, my dear; but if we love and trust Him He will give us the strength and patience to make a way over them; and that is better. 'Who art thou, O great mountain? Before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain' (Zech. iv: 7)."—Early Dew.

Sketches of Famous Persons.

ALEXANDRA, PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Princess of Wales is a picture of modest good taste as she walks the deck of her husband's yacht. She always wears there a plainly made dress of some dark color, with a sailor's hat, or a close soft hat, which is exceedingly becoming to her. Her little daughters are dressed in dark serges or simple cottons, and sailors' hats always crown their long, fair hair.

BEACONSFIELD.

A recent appearance of the Earl of Beaconsfield in the British House of Commons is thus described:

"The old man was in gala costume, the edge of a white waistcoat showing above his close-fitting frock coat, and his hands gloved in daintiest lavender kid. He had a stick with him, not a stout, serviceable blackthorn, such as common persons are glad to equip themselves with when they have passed the limit of three-score-years-and-ten, but a handsome cane of the fashionable 'crutch' order of architecture. In the famous picture of Dizzy which D'Orsay drew, he is prominently displaying in jewelled hand a tasseled cane, is bedecked with rings and chains, and a wreath of hair is falling over his white forehead. He has given up the tassel, has added a hook to his cane, and given away his rings and chains, but still he clings to his bountiful hair. There are many marvels and mysteries about Lord Beaconsfield, but surely not the least is this miraculous retention of the historic curl."

HEINRICH SCHLIEMANN.

Dr. Schlieman, who has contributed so much to science by his explorations and excavations in the Troad, is a short, bald-headed, round-faced German, speaking with a thick nasal voice, as if his eye-glasses pinched his nose too hard, and quite fast except when he attempts to repeat Homer, at which time he stutters and stammers and "breaks up" in a way that recalls the school-boy. Mrs. Schliemann is a Greek of exceedingly pleasant features and graceful manners. She is so artless and unassuming that one is tempted to think that she has always led a quiet home life, a belief soon dissipated by seeing her admirable skill in entertaining a large circle at once.

BENNETT AND GREELEY.

The former was an Ann street man for six years, and what years of toil they were! He met Greeley almost daily, but there was no congeniality, and it is doubtful if they ever held a half-hour's conversation. Bennett, however, saw the power of the laborious printer and editor, who was plodding with such determination, and he offered him a partnership in the Herald. The idea was impracticable, since each man was a leader, and you might as well have united Ben Franklin and Voltaire in a grand journalistic effort. Both Bennett and Greeley were ambitious, but one looked on the journal merely as the road to wealth and distinction, while the other viewed wealth merely as a means of making the journal. The perfect newspaper was Greeley's lifelong ideal. Bennett cared nothing for the contents of his paper so long as it sold. On the other hand, Greeley did not expect wide popularity, nor did he care for its loss so long as the paper was maintained in its noble destiny. He did not (as he said) "expect to please every one, but he intended to make a paper in which everybody of decent character might find something of interest and nothing offensive to morals." For this reason he employed writers of classical attainment, in which point he was utterly deficient. Bennett, on the other hand, though a fine Latin and Greek scholar, was indifferent to literary style. He wanted a corps of free-lancers to make forays on society, and required spice rather than elegance. Greeley essayed the discussion of social topics with a view of improving the race, while Bennett only laughed at the reformer and his ethics. To quote his words, "Greeley was a galvanized squash." This was the end of all controversy. When these remarkable men left Ann street, one went to the east and the other to the west. They, however, only separated a few hundred feet, and for nearly thirty years each labored in producing a great journal—but what a gulf between them!

Greeley and Bennett, when they were Ann street editors, were both of slender build, but in expression of face there was a vast difference. Their offices were near, but they approached from different directions, and hence seldom met. Greeley generally entered Ann street from Broadway, while Bennett's route was from the Nassau street corner. Greeley, though slightly stooping, looked people squarely in the face, while Bennett, who was four inches taller, stood bolt upright, but fixed his eye downward, as though to conceal his repulsive features. Bennett walked stiffly and carried a cane. Greeley would have felt as awkward with the latter as he would with a sword. Bennett dressed neatly. Greeley was a sloven. Bennett wrote a legible hand (he was once a teacher), while Greeley's calligraphy was abominable. As an editor, Bennett's forte was to dictate, while Greeley's was to write. The Herald's best articles were done by the staff, while the Tribune's thunderbolts bore the stamp of its chief. Both of these men were abstemious, and although Bennett was often the apologist for vice, his habits were very correct. His finesse, however, was always for sale.—Cincinnati Gazette's N. Y. Letter.

The Blue Grass Region.

Blue grass, as an adjective, says the New York Evening Post, is in the Kentucky dialect a synonym for the superlative degree of excellence. The natives use it in the same manner as the names of famous vintages of wine are employed in the south of France—as terms of affection and respect. As a noun, blue grass is the popular name of a superior kind of pasture growth which attains in Kentucky a peculiar degree of perfection, and whose presence is the source of no small part of the State's fame and wealth. Poa pratensis is what the botanists call it. June grass is the name it bears in New England. The sobriquet under which it appears in Kentucky owes its origin to the blue hue which the grass assumes during its flowering time in the early summer. Its presence is an indication of the richest land. The same soil which, if left to itself, will bear the blue grass with the greatest success will, if cultivated, produce huge crops of tobacco and hemp, the most consuming of all farm products, without any sensible diminution in strength. When uncleared, trees of black walnut, blue ash and black locust cover it to bear testimony to its virtue. A dozen counties in Kentucky boast of soil strong enough to produce the blue grass in a greater or less degree of perfection. The thousand and one requisites for its absolutely perfect growth are found combined in only three—Fayette, Woodford and Bourbon—which together constitute the famous blue grass region of the State. Fayette is the county which includes the city of Lexington and Ashland, the home of Henry Clay; Woodford, the one in which is Woodbine, Alexander's farm the largest in the State; and Bourbon is the source of the finest of Kentucky's exported cattle. These three are alike districts of exhaustless fertility, and alike possess a subsoil of blue limestone which constitutes a perpetual and natural fertiliser. The blue grass is cultivated as a food for stock. It perfects the good qualities of an animal and diminishes his bad ones. Kentuckians assert that it makes horses go faster, cows give more milk and bear more flesh, sheep grow more quickly and wear more wool, than any other food in the world. It is exclusively a pasture growth. It cannot be cured for hay.

STATE NEWS.

At this writing we don't know of a single house for rent, and the demand grows all the time.—Washington Press.

The Elizabeth City & Norfolk Railroad, it is announced, will be finished and in running order within sixty days. The equipment and iron is in Norfolk. The length of the road will be forty-three miles.—Tarboro Southerner.

We learn that the bridge over the South Fork river, and the Narrow Gauge Railroad, has been completed; now the laying of the track to Lincolnton will be pushed forward at once.—Hickory Press.

We heard of two or three cases, several days ago, where parties in Kinston had committed larceny and forgery and the offense had been condoned and the prosecution ceased on payment of damage. The parties concerned ought to remember that there is such an offence as compounding a felony, and that they are subject to indictment for their acts.—Kinston Journal.

The gold mining industry in this county is just beginning to make itself felt. Since Dr. Mears bought the Phœnix mines several years ago, a mining boom has been steadily growing. We understand that a Northern party is prospecting several of the mines in the neighborhood of the Phœnix, with the intention of purchasing, and will set machinery at work that will raise the ore by the tons. The company that owns the Phœnix mine have placed about $110,000 worth of machinery at work and are still adding to this.—Concord Sun.

With pleasure we announce that a movement is on foot by capitalists, to build by next summer, a large hotel in Asheville, with extensive grounds, beautified, and all the modern comforts and conveniences. Mr. Richmond Pearson proposes that if Richmond Hill be selected as the location of the hotel, he will make a fee simple gift of fifty acres of land, with all water supply &c., and take ten thousand dollars worth of stock in it. This is a most liberal offer, and exhibits a proper, and at the same time shrewd business energy.—Asheville Citizen.

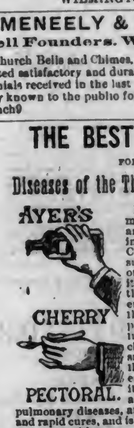
THE BEST REMEDY

FOR

Diseases of the Throat and Lungs,



AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL.

In diseases of the pulmonary organs a safe and reliable remedy is invaluable. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL is such a remedy, and no other consequently merits the confidence of the public. It is a scientific combination of the medicinal principles and curative virtues of the finest drugs, chemically united, of such power as to insure the greatest possible efficiency and uniformity of results. It strikes at the foundation of all pulmonary diseases, affording prompt relief and rapid cures, and is adapted to patients of any age or either sex. Being very palatable, the youngest children take it readily. In ordinary Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Influenza, Clergyman's Sore Throat, Asthma, Croup, and Catarrh, the effects of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL are magical, and multitudes are annually preserved from serious illness by its timely and faithful use. It should be kept at hand in every household for the protection it affords in sudden attacks. In Whooping-cough and Consumption there is no other remedy so efficacious, soothing, and helpful.

Low prices are inducements to try some of the many mixtures, or syrups, made of cheap and ineffective ingredients, now offered, which, as they contain no curative qualities, can afford only temporary relief, and are sure to deceive and disappoint the patient. Diseases of the throat and lungs demand active and effective treatment; and it is dangerous experimenting with unknown and cheap medicines, from the great liability that these diseases may, while so trifled with, become deeply seated or incurable. Use AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and you may confidently expect the best results. It is a standard medical preparation, of known and acknowledged curative power, and is as cheap as its careful preparation and fine ingredients will allow. Eminent physicians, knowing its composition, prescribe it in their practice. The test of half a century has proven its absolute certainty to cure all pulmonary complaints not already beyond the reach of human aid.

AN ONLY DAUGHTER CURED OF CONSUMPTION.

When death was hourly expected, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting with the many herbs of Calcutta, he accidentally made a preparation which cured his only child of Consumption. His child is now in this country and enjoying the best of health. He has proved to the world that Consumption can be positively and permanently cured. The Doctor now gives this Recipe free, only asking two green stamps to pay expenses. This Herb also cures night-sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold up in twenty-four hours. Address CRADDOCK & CO., 1032 Race St., Philadelphia, naming this paper.

Clergymen, Bankers, Book-keepers, editors and others that lead sedentary lives, will find much relief from headaches, nervousness and constipation engendered from want of exercise, by taking Simmons Regulator. It is a harmless vegetable compound, and numbers who have tried it will confidently assert that it is the best remedy that can be used. It expels humors of the blood, cleanses the liver, restores the kidneys to healthy action and drives out the despondency and gloom of ill health. The patient soon feels as if he had taken a new lease of life, and is overjoyed to find the depressed feeling dissipated, the costive habits corrected and new streams of health coursing through his veins.

Our thought our sorrow shall beguile
For soon, with a celestial smile,
We meet to part no more." J. A. R.

In Bladen county, Nov. 5th, 1880, of pneumonia, JOHN FREDERICK CROOM, son and only child of John F. and Henrietta Croom, age 2 years and 12 days.

On the morning of Dec. 4th, 1880 at the residence of her husband, near Cameron, Mrs. FLORA M. WORTHY, wife of S B Worthy, and daughter of D. McIntyre.

Her only child (an infant daughter) preceded her in the early summer, her mother in the summer of 1879, her brother and sister in the summer of 1877—all members of the Church or children of the Covenant. Bereaved and sorrowing friends take comfort in the promise.

Near Franklin, N. C., Nov. 29th, 1880, WILLIE McDOWELL, aged 10 years.

Willie was a great sufferer from infancy, and under Christian training learned to recognize the hand of God in his afflictions. As a result of this recognition he learned great patience and submitted to the stroke without murmuring. Willie, peaceful, quiet and thoughtful beyond his years, has gone to rest with four little brothers and sisters.
M. R. K.

In Mecklenburg county, N. C., on 21st of November, 1880, Mrs. HANNAH GRIER NEEL, in the 79th year of her age, wife of Gen. W. H. Neel and daughter of Lenas and Margaret Alexander.

Mrs Neel expired on her husband's 81st birthday, and had she lived four days longer would have reached the 61st anniversary of their marriage. They brought up a large family of children, all of whom were married. Mrs. Neel was a great sufferer the last ten years of her life, which she bore with Christian patience and fortitude. She was a consistent member of Steele Creek Presbyterian church for more than sixty years, and was eminently a devoted Christian wife and mother. May her children and others imitate her godly life and example.
A. N. G.

JANE E. CAMERON departed this life Dec. 4th, 1880, aged 51 years.

The evening of her death she sat up until a late hour in the night reading her Bible, as was her usual practice. After closing the Book, she conversed cheerfully for some minutes, and then making an effort to rise from her chair, fell and expired almost instantly.

In all her ways she acknowledged her Saviour, and His name was ever uppermost in her mind. She was a consistent Christian lady, a member of the M. E. Church South, but the greatest of all was her charity. She was an affectionate daughter, a kind sister and a true friend, always ready at the bedside of the afflicted. Yes, she will be missed by her many friends, for no one knew her but to love her. May the living take warning from this sudden visitation of Providence.

We miss her now! She's gone
To that bright world above,
To sing around the heavenly throne
Of Jesus and His love.

At her home, in Buffalo congregation, Oct. 27th, 1880, in the 26th year of her age, Mrs. ELLEN GILMOUR McIVER, wife of Columbus E. McIver, and daughter of Matthew Gilmour, Esq., of Chatham county.

Death seldom comes on sadder errand than when, as in this instance, he takes one who was a loving wife, a dutiful daughter and a devoted sister, to the narrow home appointed for all the living. The day she died, her little babe, ten days old, was laid away, and the day after she was placed by its side. She was so full of life, of animal spirits, of energy, hope and industry—she was so happy in her new home, and gave such promise of a life of usefulness and influence, that it seems as if such as she should not and could not be taken. But God knows best.

Mrs McIver was of Scotch birth and training. Her father removed from Scotland with his family less than ten years ago, and has been settled about eight years in Buffalo congregation. She united with Buffalo church on profession of faith more than two years ago, and has "witnessed a good confession." She was married Dec. 25th, 1879, and so soon her brief life has closed! A large congregation attended the funeral from Buffalo church, attesting the wide-spread sympathy and sincere sorrow of the community.

How sad it seems when viewed from earth. Yet God's time is best. In her earnest and happy disposition, her growing likeness of the Divine image, and her constant usefulness, friends and the dearest of earth took increasing delight. When God places still higher honor on His own, and calls to Himself the loved of earth, should any one murmur? "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus shall God bring with Him."

Asleep in Jesus! far from thee
Thy kindred and their graves may be,
But there is still a blessed sleep
From which none ever wake to weep.

Arousing its Readers.

An alarm of fire at midnight is a startling thing, but not half so startling to many who hear it as would be the sudden knowledge of their own dangerous physical condition. Thousands of thousands are hurrying to their graves because they are carelessly indifferent to the insidious inroads of disease and the means of cure. It is the mission of H. H. Warner & Co., with their Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, to arouse men to a sense of their danger and then cure them.—Memphis Appeal.

Weekly Courier-Journal.

THE Publishers of the Louisville COURIER-JOURNAL claim that for the quantity and quality of matter published and the care taken in preparing each issue, it is by odds the best and cheapest paper in the United States.

The COURIER-JOURNAL is a consolidation of the Louisville Courier, Louisville Journal and Louisville Democrat, and is now in its fiftieth year. Being a long established and thoroughly responsible paper, occupying its own property, worth over $500,000, and having the most costly machinery and ample means, subscribers in making advance payments for it do not run the risk of losing their money, as is too often the case in papers that have a precarious existence of only a few years.

Rare inducements in the way of cash commissions and valuable premiums are offered agents, postmasters and club raisers who send subscriptions to the WEEKLY COURIER JOURNAL. No traveling agents are employed by the Courier-Journal Co., as we desire at every place local agents known to the community they reside in, and to whom will be sent, on application, free of charge, an agents' outfit of sample copies, posters, blanks and circulars, giving list of premiums and cash commissions we offer.

Subscribers can, by taking advantage of our premium list, secure any one of the leading periodicals of the day, a handsome book, or some other valuable premium, for a very small amount of money. Our list of premiums to all subscribers who send us Two Dollars will be found to be worthy of especial attention.

Specimen copies and full descriptive circulars will be sent free of charge to any one on application. Subscription terms, postage free, are—for Daily, $12; Sunday, $2; Weekly, with premium, $2; without premium, $1 50.

Any one sending four yearly subscribers and six dollars will be entitled to an extra copy of the Weekly Courier-Journal one year, free to any address. Address,

FOR THE FAMILY

Never Despair.

I fain would impress on
The weary and sad
The truths of a lesson
In metaphor clad.

Innocent merriment
Shortens the mile;
Try the experiment
Once in a while.

Face your foes fearlessly,
"Never say die"—
Trials ta'en carelessly,
Lightsomely lie.

Our teardrops are lenses
That magnify ills;
They cozen our senses
Till hillocks seem hills.

And faces grow wrinkled,
While tresses with gray
Grow speedily sprinkled
When woe has her way.

Horrors may haunt you, but
Foul may grow fair,
Dangers may daunt you, but
"Never despair."

Verily, verily
Judge as you may,
He who toils merrily
Carries the day.

A Boy Emigrant.

Many years ago, when Peter the Great was Czar of Russia, and when the improvements that he was making all over the country gave foreign workmen a fine chance of earning high wages, a number of emigrants landed one cold winter morning at one of the Russian ports on the Gulf of Finland to see if they could find work, as so many others had done.

A curious mixture they were—men women and children from every country on either side of the Baltic. Tall, fresh-colored Swedes, in gray frocks and thick blue stockings; stout, light-haired Germans, and ruddy, blue-eyed Danes; big-boned Pomeranians, with low foreheads and shaggy brown beards; and short, squat Finns, whose round puffy faces and thick yellow hair gave them the look of over-boiled apple dumplings.

But their first taste of Russia was not at all a pleasant one. At the port, where they had landed it was the rule that all emigrants who came ashore should be kept in one place till the Czar's agent came to examine them; and the place where they were kept was an old warehouse, very bare and dismal looking, with nothing in it but a few old sails and some heaps of straw. Here they remained for two days, while the snow fell and the wind roared outside, their food being brought them by the soldiers of the port. The men smoked their pipes and played cards, the women knitted stockings or mended the clothes of their husbands and children, while the little people played hide-and-seek in and out of the dark corners, and made the gloomy old place quite merry with their shouts and laughter.

But there was only one boy (a bright-eyed little fellow, with brown curly hair) who took no part in the fun, but sat in a corner by himself, chalking curious figures on the wall, which he seemed to copy from the book in his other hand. Any one who had looked closely at these figures would have seen that they were letters—Russian letters—and that sometimes he would write a whole word at once, and then put the meaning opposite it in German. In fact, he was teaching himself the language of this new country he had got into, and seemed to be pretty well on with it, for every now and then he would leave off writing and read a page of his book, without meeting a single word he could not master.

"Look at Karl Osterman yonder, slaving away at that book of his!" said one of the men. "Much good that'll do him! As if one could saw a plank or hammer a rivet any better for knowing that crack-jaw lingo!"

"He's going to teach the Russians their own language—that's what he's at!" grinned another. "A regular professor, ain't he? far too clever for poor fellows like us!"

"Ay, he'll be a great man one of these days," chimed in a third, with a hoarse laugh, "and then, perhaps he'll be kind enough to give us a job."

Little Karl's eyes sparkled, and he set his lips firmly, as if making up his mind that he would be a great man yet somehow or other, but he said nothing and went quietly on with his work. Suddenly the door flew open, and in came a Russian soldier in a shabby green uniform, trimmed with faded gold lace. He was a very tall and powerful man, with a dark, weather-beaten face, framed in closely-cropped hair, and great black eyes that seemed to pierce right through any one whom they looked at.

"I say, my good fellows," he cried, "here's an order from the Czar, which I'm to paste up in this room; and I want to have it in German and Swedish as well as Russian, that every one who comes in may be able to read it. Perhaps one of you would kindly lend me a helping hand with the job, for I'm not very glib with foreign languages myself."

The men glanced meaningly at each other, and the two who had been making fun of Osterman looked rather sheepish, as if thinking that they had better been learning Russian themselves instead of laughing at him.

"I'll do it for you, Mr. Soldier," said little Osterman, stepping boldly forward, "if there aren't any very big words in it. I've only got as far as three-syllable words in Russian yet, you know."

The soldier started at him for a moment, and then began to laugh.

"Well, my boy, I don't think you'll find many big words on this paper; it's pretty plain sailing as far as it goes. See if you can read it."

Karl took the paper and read it off easily enough.

"Well done, my fine fellow!" cried the Russian; "you're a smart lad for your age. I can see that. Now try if you can put it into German."

To work went our hero, with a look as solemn as any professor on his little round face. Once or twice he stopped as if at a loss for a word; but he got through at last, and having finished the German, began upon the Swedish.

"What? do you know Swedish, too?" cried the new friend. "Why, man, you're a perfect dictionary!"

"My mother was a Swede," answered Osterman, "and she taught me her own language; and my father was a German, and he taught me his."

"You're a lucky fellow!" said the Russian, with a sigh, "I only wish I'd had some one to teach me when I was of your age, I should know a great deal more than I do."

"What? didn't your father teach you then?"

"He died when I was a mere child," said the Russian, sadly, "and my mother, too."

"Oh dear, I'm so sorry! But had you no brothers and sisters?"

"I had a brother, but he was blind, poor fellow, and couldn't help me; and as for my sister," (here his face darkened fearfully,) "instead of being kind to me, she tried to have me killed!"

"What a shame!" cried the boy, indignantly, clinching a fist about the size of a large plum. "I only wish I'd been your brother!—I wouldn't have let anybody touch you!"

This valiant promise of protection made by a tiny boy to a stalwart soldier of six feet three, tickled the other emigrants so much that they burst into a roar of laughter which made the old walls ring. But the soldier did not laugh; he only passed his hand tenderly over the child's curly head, and then stooped to look at the book which Karl had been reading.

"Ah! the story of Ilia, the Strong. I used to be very fond of it when I was a boy. How do you like it?"

"Very much indeed. I didn't think I'd have time to finish it, when they said the Czar was coming to look at me; but I suppose he is too busy amusing himself to care about us poor fellows."

The soldier gave such a terrible frown that the man nearest him started back in dismay, and even Osterman himself looked startled. But the next moment the Russian's face cleared again, though he was still very sad.

"You shouldn't talk like that, my boy," said he; "the Czar would have come to you directly after you landed, if he hadn't been ill. However, he's well again now, and I shouldn't wonder if you were to see him here to-day."

Just then the door opened again, and in trooped a dozen grand-looking officers in splendid uniforms, the foremost of whom, making a low bow to the shabby soldier, said, very respectfully, "All is ready, your majesty."

At the word "majesty," all the emigrants started as if they had been shot; for they now saw that this shabby looking fellow whom they had taken for a common soldier was no other than the Czar, Peter the Great himself. But little Osterman did no seem frightened in the least. He slid his soft little hand into the Emperor's huge brown fist, and cried, joyfully:

"I'm so glad you're a good Czar after all, for the Czars that I've read about were very bad fellows, indeed, and I know I shouldn't have liked them."

"Well, well, my boy," said Peter, clapping him on the shoulder, with a hearty laugh, "I hope you'll find me a little better than some of them, even though I am an Emperor. Come along with me and I'll find you something better to do than chalking an old wall."

The boy went with his new friend, and any history of Russia will tell you how high Osterman rose, and what great things he accomplished. Peter the Great made him his secretary; the Empress Catherine I. made him chamberlain, and the Czar Peter II. gave him a title of honor; and before the Empress Anne had been many years on the throne the little student whom his comrades had laughed at in the old warehouse thirty years before had be come Count Osterman, Prime Minister of Russia.

How Love Removed a Mountain.

"Mamma," said Arthur "how can faith remove mountains?"

"I will tell you how love once removed a mountain," said his mother, "and then you will perhaps understand what is now puzzling you:

"More than a hundred and twenty years ago there was born in an old castle on the shores of the Pentland Firth, in the far north of Scotland, a boy who, when he grew up, became a very useful man. His mother was one of a noble family, and he inherited a title himself. He was Sir John Sinclair, but far better than titles and wealth was the training the mother gave to her son. She taught him—for his father died when he was young—how to manage wisely his estates; and as he grew up he showed that he did not intend to live a selfish, luxurious life, but to do his best for his neighbors and his country. At that time good roads were very much needed, even in the more busy parts of England; and in the north of Scotland, where the inhabitants were few, and for the most part poor, the roads were often very bad.

"One day a neighbor asked Sir John when he would make a road over Ben Cheilt—a large mountain which interfered much with freedom of travelling in Caithness. He was not prepared to begin a road over Ben Cheilt just then, but the time came soon after. He went to London on a visit, and there saw a younglady whom he wished to marry, but when he asked her to go with him to Caithness she shook her head She liked Sir John, but in those days of slow traveling and dear postage the distance between Thurso and London seemed immense, and Miss Maitland could not make up her mind to go so far from home. However, she did not altogether refuse him, and he went back to Thurso resolved that the big mountain, Ben Cheilt, should no longer stand in the way of a direct road to the south. He surveyed it carefully, made up his mind what to do, and then sent out over the country for all the men that could be got to help him. One summer morning, at early dawn, one thousand two hundred and sixty men assembled under his command, and by nightfall the old bridle-track was made into a carriage road. Before he could go south again, a gentleman who had just been traveling in Scotland, carried to Miss Maitland the story of Sir John's road-making, and all his other improvements, and she was so much pleased that she determined to reward him in the way he wished. They were married soon afterwards.

"That was not Sir John's only effort. He lived to be an old man, to do a great deal for Scotland, and to be much respected. And now, Arthur, you see how love can remove mountains."

"He didn't remove it, mamma; he only made a way over it," said Arthur.

"And what more was needed?" answered his mamma. "God does not take mountains out of our way altogether in this world, my dear; but if we love and trust Him He will give us the strength and patience to make a way over them; and that is better. 'Who art thou, O great mountain? Before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain' (Zech. iv: 7)."—Early Dew.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Sketches of Famous Persons.

ALEXANDRA, PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Princess of Wales is a picture of modest good taste as she walks the deck of her husband's yacht. She always wears there a plainly made dress of same dark color, with a sailor's hat, or a close soft hat, which is exceedingly becoming to her. Her little daughters are dressed in dark serges or simple cottons, and sailors' hats always crown their long, fair hair.

BEACONSFIELD.

A recent appearance of the Earl of Beaconsfield in the British House of Commons is thus described:

"The old man was in gala costume, the edge of a white waistcoat showing above his close-fitting frock coat, and his hands gloved in daintiest lavender kid. He had a stick with him, not a stout, serviceable blackthorn, such as common persons are glad to equip themselves with when they have passed the limit of three-score-years-and-ten, but a handsome cane of the fashionable 'crutch' order of architecture. In the famous picture of Dizzy which D'Orsay drew, he is prominently displaying in jewelled hand a tasseled cane, is bedecked with rings and chains, and a wreath of hair is falling over his white forehead. He has given up the tassel, has added a hook to his cane, and given away his rings and chains, but still he clings to his bountiful hair. There are many marvels and mysteries about Lord Beaconsfield, but surely not the least is this miraculous retention of the historic curl."

HEINRICH SCHLIEMANN.

Dr. Schlieman, who has contributed so much to science by his explorations and excavations in the Troad, is a short, bald-headed, round-faced German, speaking with a thick nasal voice, as if his eye-glasses pinched his nose too hard, and quite fast except when he attempts to repeat Homer, at which time he stutters and stammers and "breaks up" in a way that recalls the school-boy. Mrs. Schliemann is a Greek of exceedingly pleasant features and graceful manners. She is so artless and unassuming that one is tempted to think that she has always led a quiet home life, a belief soon dissipated by seeing her admirable skill in entertaining a large circle at once.

BENNETT AND GREELEY.

The former was an Ann street man for six years, and what years of toil they were! He met Greeley almost daily, but there was no conviviality, and it is doubtful if they ever held a half-hour's conversation. Bennett, however, saw the power of the laborious printer and editor, who was plodding with such determination, and he offered him a partnership in the Herald. The idea was impracticable, since each man was a leader, and you might as well have united Ben Franklin and Voltaire in a grand journalistic effort. Both Bennett and Greeley were ambitious, but one looked on the journal merely as the road to wealth and distinction, while the other viewed wealth merely as a means of making the journal. The perfect newspaper was Greeley's lifelong ideal. Bennett cared nothing for the contents of his paper so long as it sold. On the other hand, Greeley did not expect wide popularity, nor did he care for its loss so long as the paper was maintained in its noble destiny. He did not (as he said) "expect to please every one, but he intended to make a paper in which everybody of decent character might find something of interest and nothing offensive to morals." For this reason he employed writers of classical attainment, in which point he was utterly deficient. Bennett, on the other hand though a fine Latin and Greek scholar, was indifferent to literary style. He wanted a corps of freelancers to make for him society, and required spice rather than elegance. Greeley essayed the discussion of social topics with a view of improving the race, while Bennett only laughed at the reformer and his ethics. To quote his words, "Greeley was a galvanized squash" This was the end of all controversy. When these unshakable men left Ann street, one went to the east and the other to the west. Thus, however, each separated a few hundred feet, and for many thirty years each labored in producing a great journal—but what a gulf between them!

Greeley and Bennett, when they were Ann street editors, were both of slender build, but in expression of face there was a vast difference. Their offices were near, but they approached from different directions, and hence seldom met. Greeley generally entered Ann street from Broadway, while Bennett's route was from the Nassau street corner. Greeley, though slightly stooping, looked people squarely in the face, while Bennett, who was four inches taller, stood bolt upright, but fixed his eye downward, as though to conceal his repulsive features. Bennett walked stiffly and carried a cane. Greeley would have felt as awkward with the latter as he would with a sword. Bennett dressed neatly. Greeley was a sloven. Bennett wrote a legible hand (he was once a teacher), while Greeley's calligraphy was abominable. As an editor, Bennett's forte was to dictate, while Greeley's was to write. The Herald's best articles were done by the staff, while the Tribune's thunderbolt's bore the stamp of its chief. Both of these men were abstemious, and although Bennett was often the apologist for vice his habits were very correct. His influence, however, was always for sale.—Cincinnati Gazette's N. Y. Letter.

The Blue Grass Region.

Blue grass, as an adjective, says the New York Evening Post, is in the Kentucky dialect a synonym for the superlative degree of excellence. The natives use it in the same manner as the names of famous vintages of wine are employed in the south of France—as terms of affection and respect. As a noun, blue grass is the popular name of a superior kind of pasture growth which attains in Kentucky a peculiar degree of perfection, and whose presence is the source of no small part of the State's fame and wealth. Poa pratensis is what the botanists call it. June grass is the name it bears in New England. The sobriquet under which it appears in Kentucky owes its origin to the blue hue which the grass assumes during its flowering time in the early summer. Its presence is an indication of the richest land. The same soil which, if left to itself, will bear the blue grass with the greatest success will, if cultivated, produce huge crops of tobacco and hemp, the most consuming of all farm products, without any sensible diminution in strength. When uncleared, trees of black walnut, blue ash and black locust cover it to bear testimony to its virtue. A dozen counties in Kentucky boast of soil strong enough to produce the blue grass in a greater or less degree of perfection. The thousand and one requisites for its absolutely perfect growth are found combined in only three—Fayette, Woodford and Bourbon—which together constitute the famous blue grass region of the State. Fayette is the county which includes the city of Lexington and Ashland, the home of Henry Clay; Woodford, the one in which is Woodbine, Alexander's farm the largest in the State; and Bourbon is the source of the finest of Kentucky's exported cattle. These three are alike districts of exhaustless fertility, and alike possess a subsoil of blue limestone which constitutes a perpetual and natural fertilizer. The blue grass is cultivated as a food for stock. It perfects the good qualities of an animal and diminishes his bad ones. Kentuckians assert that it makes horses go faster, cows give more milk and bear more flesh, sheep grow more quickly and wear more wool, than any other food in the world. It is exclusively a pasture growth. It cannot be cured for hay.

STATE NEWS.

Luke Tannahill, a colored cropper on the plantation of Dr. Jos. H. Baker, made 25½ bales of cotton to one horse.—Tarboro Southerner.

At this writing we don't know of a single house for rent, and the demand grows all the time.—Washington Press.

The Elizabeth City & Norfolk Railroad, it is announced, will be finished and in running order within sixty days. The equipment and iron is in Norfolk. The length of the road will be forty-three miles.—Tarboro Southerner.

We learn that the bridge over the South Fork river, and the Narrow Gauge Railroad, has been completed; now the laying of the track to Lincolnton will be pushed forward at once.—Hickory Press.

We heard of two or three cases, several days ago, where parties in Kinston had committed larceny and forgery and the offense had been condoned and the prosecution ceased on payment of damage. The parties concerned ought to remember that there is such an offence as compounding a felony, and that they are subject to indictment for their acts.—Kinston Journal.

The gold mining industry in this county is just beginning to make itself felt. Since Dr. Mears bought the Phœnix mines several years ago, a mining boom has been steadily growing. We understand that a Northern party is prospecting several of the mines in the neighborhood of the Phœnix, with the intention of purchasing, and will set machinery at work that will raise the ore by the tons. The company that owns the Phœnix mine have placed about $110,000 worth of machinery at work and are still adding to this.—Concord Sun.

With pleasure we announce that a movement is on foot by capitalists, to build by next summer, a large hotel, in Asheville, with extensive grounds, beautified, and all the modern comforts and conveniences. Mr. Richmond Pearson proposes that if Richmond Hill be selected as the location of the hotel, he will make a fee simple gift of fifty acres of land, with all water supply, &c., and take ten thousand dollars worth of stock in it. This is a most liberal offer, and exhibits a proper, and at the same time shrewd business energy.—Asheville Citizen.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL

In diseases of the pulmonary organs a safe and reliable remedy is invaluable. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL is such a remedy, and no other so eminently merits the confidence of the public. It is a scientific combination of the medicinal principles and curative virtues of the finest drugs, chemically united, of such power as to insure the greatest possible efficiency and uniformity of results. It strikes at the foundation of all pulmonary diseases, affording prompt relief and rapid cures, and is adapted to patients of any age or either sex. Being very palatable, the youngest children take it readily. In ordinary Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Influenza, Clergyman's Sore Throat, Asthma, Croup, and Catarrh, the effects of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL are magical, and multitudes are annually preserved from serious illness by its timely and faithful use. It should be kept at hand in every household for the protection it affords in sudden attacks. In Whooping-cough and Consumption there is no other remedy so efficacious, soothing, and helpful.

Low prices are inducements to try some of the many mixtures, or syrups, made of cheap and ineffective ingredients, now offered, which, as they contain no curative qualities, can afford only temporary relief, and are sure to deceive and disappoint the patient. Diseases of the throat and lungs demand active and effective treatment; and it is dangerous experimenting with unknown and cheap medicines, from the great liability that these diseases may, while so trifled with, become deeply seated or incurable. Use AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and you may confidently expect the best results. It is a standard medical preparation, of known and acknowledged curative power, and is as cheap as its careful preparation and fine ingredients will allow. Eminent physicians, knowing its composition, prescribe it in their practice. The test of half a century has proven its absolute certainty to cure all pulmonary complaints not already beyond the reach of human aid.

"Presenting as it does the carefully prepared Essays of some of the ablest scholars in the Presbyterian denomination—a denomination which has long been noted for the brilliancy of its intellectual achievements as well as the earnest zeal of its piety—this work will not only be full of interest but will also stimulate thought, awaken inquiry, and give thorough discipline to the intellectual powers of its readers. Dealing in a clear and forcible manner with topics of vital interest, forming an encyclopedia of Presbyterian Doctrine, and bringing within the compass of a single volume the rich results of the close thought and careful study of many of the ablest men of this strong denomination, it will undoubtedly be one of the most valuable contributions to Church Literature which has been made for many years.

"This Report will be published in one large 8vo. volume, containing over 1,000 pages; and will be nicely printed on tinted-laid paper, neatly bound in cloth, with covers ornamented with black and gold representations of the beautiful shields of the Church organizations of different nations, with which the large hall in which the meetings were held was decorated.

"Every Book will contain ten pages of BEAUTIFUL COLORED ILLUSTRATIONS representing the emblems of the Church Organizations of the different nationalities which participated in the Council. These designs formed the decorations of Horticultural Hall, in which the meetings were held, and the pictures, which we have obtained from costly plates, add materially to the beauty and value of the Report."

EXTRACTS FROM A YOUNG LADY'S LETTERS HOME.

NEW YORK, December 5th, 1880.

There is hardly a more discouraging place for a decorative art pupil to go into than the rooms of the Decorative Art Society. One would think to be sure that a way to work and independence had been opened for women in this direction that would employ all who need work for the next generation or two. Wealth and luxurious tastes call for so many pretty things, there is such a demand for costly trifles of art, the fashion being to crowd these elegant houses with paintings and porcelains and embroideries and draperies fine knick-nacks of every possible description; and then all this is such pretty work to do, and easy (having been once learned), that every woman is anxious to learn. There are gray-haired women at Cooper learning to draw. You would feel sure it was all comfortably arranged between demand and supply for once. But alas! and alas! supply is ahead of demand already. One visit to that one place is enough to convince you that every second woman in the United States must be painting tiles, plaques, vases, fans, screens, note paper, buttons, cards, boxes, window shades—or embroidering or designing or decorating something or other in some beautiful, tasteful way never thought of till now. And they say that rich women are amusing themselves with such employments, so that they not only do a great deal to decorate their own homes, but they enter the market and sell their things. I hear of a rich woman who painted a vase and sold it for $90 and gave the money away in charity. This is very nice indeed, but you see it stands in the way of women who are painting for their bread.

Just as soon as a door is opened, it is crowded. However, one need not despair, for new doors are continually being found. I suppose that ten or fifteen years ago there was no anticipation of such a demand and supply as these Decorative Art Rooms exhibit; and as wealth and refinement increase and spread, there will always be fresh calls upon ingenuity and taste and skill. It is high time that there was a market at the South for such things. * * * I do not see after all that a first-rate worker gets so very much better paid here than at the South. To be sure I do not know much about it, and you have always said we must not set up to generalize from one or two instances. But a young woman who has been offered $40 a month in North Carolina and refuses it, and comes to New York and gets other kinds of work at $40 a month here, gains only the outside advantages of being in New York. That these are great is, of course, undeniable. The stimulation of your mind is one of the greatest. When you are associated with other workers you feel so full of life and energy, and desire to excel: and you get new ideas continually. I don't know a greater delight—and a constant delight too—than the feeling that you are improving: that you are seeing more and hearing more and learning more continually. Life passes with fresh sensations every day. It seems to me that all that is highest and best in one's nature gets quickened and stirred and set to growing under these opportunities. Still, for myself, I would be sorry to think I was to spend my life here. One does not care to live under the influence of constant excitement. It is living too fast. North Carolina for me! Sleepy, dull, poor, stagnant, stingy, ignorant, lazy—let them call her all these; I choose life there. I long to go and set down in peace and quiet with my work or reading just as long as I please without any proposition from anybody to go anywhere for anything.

To come here from time to time to admire and to learn would be enough.

Miss L. has published a letter to the Orphan's Friend, and one to Mr. Mills, that give the bright side of the working woman's life in New York. She says it is the working woman's paradise. But some of the city magazines give a very gloomy view. I send you a Harper that has a really appalling article.

* * * * *

Last night I heard a lecture from Mr. Street, of Lowell, Mass., on the changes in the climate of the cradle of the human race from ancient to modern times. Same style of lecture that we have heard so often in the Normal School of the University. He said that geology shows that the Caspian is only the remnant of a great sea that once covered what are now the sandy deserts of Western Asia. (In those old English books which Dr. Atkinson gave the North Carolina Historical Society last summer there is some traveler's account of having seen pieces of ships and parts of boats thrown out where Arabs were digging wells in the desert. I suppose that such things were called traveler's tales one hundred and fifty years ago.)

I send you the programme of the monthly concert of the Young Women's Christian Association. They have a fine hall open once a month for a free concert given to self-supporting women. The wealthy people who sustain the Association, ladies and gentlemen, go there and sing and play. It was all beautiful and delightful. Such a graceful kindness.

Last night we were at the Academy of Music attending the semi-millonial celebration of Wyckliffe's translation of the Bible into English. It is the Opera House, you know, and a splendid place it is—all crimson and gold, and a blaze of light from glass chandeliers and pendants. The back of the stage represents a lovely sylvan scene—a running brook overhung with willows. I am glad to tell you, by the way, that New York society has not feted the Bernhardt. She has been decidedly cut. The critics say she is a great artiste, but not a great histrionic genius.

The Bible celebration was attended by an immense crowd. The house was crammed. All the foremost city preachers were on the stage, and the exercises opened with the singing of "Coronation," led by a cornet. So I have been singing in the Academy of Music, you see. Dr. Hitchcock, President of Union Seminary, made the opening prayer. It was grand to hear the Lord's Prayer said by that audience. Dr. Storrs was the orator of the occasion: "Life and times of Wyckliffe." He is a Congregationalist, you know, and said to be one of the finest speakers in New York. The oration was full of interest; every way admirable. I suppose you could read most of it in any good cyclypædia. It was the way he put it all together and struck fire that was original. He spoke two hours, and after he closed there were other speakers, but our party came out when he finished. * * * Did you read that sermon of Talmage's I sent you, reported in the Express: Defence of the Bible against infidel attacks. A man must be doing good who preaches so. I liked his hope of having the Bible with us in heaven. He wants to hear David read the 23d Psalm. So do I.

* * * * *

I went alone last Sunday morning to Grace church, next corner to Stewart's store. The constant worshipers in these fine buildings must of course get so accustomed to the splendor that their attention is not distracted by it. But for an occasional visitor like me it is very hard to keep the mind from resting on the church rather than on the service. Wherever you turn your eye is something to study. The carved stone, the inlaid flooring, the stained glass, the marble font and altar, the tablets, the pulpit and sounding-board, the three responsive organs—it is all glorious within and without. Best of all, however, I heard an excellent sermon from Dr. Potter. * * * There is a chime of bells at Grace, and our boarding house being so near, we have the benefit of it every Sunday.

* * * * *

During these dark winter days my mind is constantly recurring to this time one year ago, and is filled with memories of that life which was then so rapidly slippingaway. As I am so much associated once more with bright and intelligent girls, a thousand things are calling her, the brightest and dearest one of all, to mind. My eyes often fill up and run over as I sit at my work. Will I ever cease to feel a great blank in my life when I think of ALICE KERR?

* * * * *

It is late at night, so I close; and yet the roar and scream of the steam-cars, and the jingle of the horse-cars, the rumbling of cabs and omnibuses are still unceasing. The shop windows are beginning their gorgeous display for the holidays. I call it heart-breaking to walk down Broadway or Sixth avenue just now with no money.

NORTH CAROLINA HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

MR. EDITOR:—You asked me to write up the State Historical Society for the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN, and as I have the honor to be Corresponding Secretary for that body the request would seem to have been made of the proper person. Truth above all things however, especially in historical matters, and the truth is, I know about as little of the Historical Society as I do about most other things. However, I shall proceed to write about it all the same. I could go down to President Battle and get a few points from him no doubt, but my communication would then lose all claim to originality. There is something refreshing in these days when everybody affects a certain omniscience in a statement, that begins "I do not know;" and I propose to make great use of that phrase for half a column, or more.

I do not know where the Historical Society of North Carolina had its beginning; which is a great pity, for I have always a great fancy for beginning at the beginning.

Gov. Swain no doubt, was the original mover in the matter, since the Society existed in his day and he had begun the collection of material years before his death, and had procured many contributions to the Society from similar associations in other States and from kindly disposed individuals here and there, either as donations, or in exchange for others. Of some of these papers the Governor was very proud, and nothing pleased him more than to be called on for a sight of some faded Revolutionary document, some autograph letter of Washington, or Harnett, or Josiah Quincy, or some state paper which was to throw a new light upon the war of the Regulation. From time to time Gov. Swain contributed articles to the University Magazine on these and kindred topics, which frequently attracted attention abroad as well as at home, and have often been inquired for since his death. He was in correspondence with distinguished gentlemen in other states, and frequently received valuable documents in reply to his queries, or in compliment to his well-known tastes, for he had the true spirit of an antiquarian, and thought nothing insignificant which might illustrate former times, or clear up an obscure point.

A few days before he died, while still confined to his bed from the effects of the accident which caused his death, he said that he had only lately gotten some information which he had long wanted on a certain chapter in our revolutionary annals, and meant to go to work at once on his long contemplated history of North Carolina.

What a volume was lost in him! The collection which he had made was claimed as belonging to his estate, after his death, and so remains to this day. At the dissolution of the University and the chaos that ensued in Chapel Hill, of course, the bottom of the Historical Society fell out along with every thing else. I believe the so-called faculty of Gov. Holden's appointment were ambitious of going through the motions with respect to this as well as other state associations. Mr. Brewer, the professor of Greek, ancient and modern, called upon me for certain papers or records supposed to be in my possession, necessary to their inauguration, which papers I firmly and with much spirit refused to surrender to any such keeping. For in the first place I had no line or scrap of any such documents, (though I took care not to say so) and in the second place, they should never have been given up if I had.

In 1875, the Historical Society was revived when the University once more lifted its head. The charter was renewed by the Legislature—and Gov. Graham named as President. But Gov. Graham's lamented death occurred in August of that year, and the venerable Dr. Hooper was elected his successor. Dr. Hooper was elected, I presume, more in compliment than with a view to energetic action from a man in his eighty-fourth year. He passed to his rest in '76, and Hon. John Kerr succeeded him. It was a mistake to elect any man president of the Society who was not either a resident of Chapel Hill, or a near neighbor; for the State University is the only proper headquarters for all associations literary or historical, touching North Carolina per se,—and the officers of all such societies should live where their work is to be done. This error has been rectified lately by the election of Hon. Kemp P. Battle, Rev. Mr. Heitman, and Prof. Winston as Executive Committee. Mr. Battle being President, and Mr. Heitman Recording Secretary. These gentlemen all live here, and are all competent and trustworthy.

If any too inquisitive genius should here propound the query as to how a historical society is organized, and starts on its way, whether with funds or without, and if with, who provides them, and if without, how it proceeds? I must frankly declare I do not know.

My impression, however is, (confirmed by some slight personal experience as correspondent secretary) that the society runs along without any funds whatever. It is like a good many other associations in North Carolina; self-supporting,—that is to say going on upon nothing; North Carolina Legislatures cordially endorsing the great principle which animated the Pickwick Club, namely; that the members should always pay their own expenses, traveling and other.

Gov. Vance once when opening a State Fair, read a phrase about North Carolina which pleased me mightily. I always loved to read it when my mind wanted sweetening in regard to this commonwealth and certain of its un-doings. He said: "This great and gallant State" * * * How well that sounds. Great and gallant. I feel as if I could cheerfully die for such a State, or at any rate I know I could wave my handkerchief with rapt enthusiasm if any of my neighbors should volunteer to sacrifice themselves.

Now North Carolina being great and gallant does it not seem somewhat incongruous that she should also be at the same time a little "near," as Peggoty said of Mr. Barkis. North Carolinians are among the very best people in the world. I do heartily honor and love the State, and glory in being one of her people. But, still,—I do wish our leaders and guides and comptrollers would recognize the fact that stinginess and illiberality in small money matters often obscure the brightness of very elevated characters. Lord Chancellor Eldon was a great legal luminary, but I believe our chief impression of him is that he loved a sixpence not wisely, but too well.

North Carolina spent last year on intoxicating liquors the generous sum of eight million dollars. This is doing things on a great scale. Who shall say we are not a "genial and whole-souled people as ever met round the social board." Eight million dollars spent voluntarily: No taxation, mind you! What a howl would have been raised from Cherokee to Currituck if the General Assembly had proposed to raise the eighth part of such a sum by taxation—or the tenth part of it,—or the twentieth,—to endow a hospital, or an asylum, or to lubricate the wheels of that poor old stick-in-the-mud vehicle our common school system!

But one likes to see harmony, proportion, fitness. A State that spends eight millions in one year for strong drink ought to spend eighty millions on educational enterprises, and eight hundred millions in religious and charitable institutions.

Ex pede Herculem. From one instance of our use of money should we judge of all the rest? Alas! if that eight millions had gone for anything but liquor, if it had even launched the State in a wild career of internal improvements which should finally bankrupt her, it would be a more promising index for her future,—better for her children in the end.

A State that spends eight millions a year for liquor while her Legislature refuses to appropriate one dollar for any State institution either charitable or educational or literary; abolishes the office of State Geologist because of its expense; declines to build a house for its Governor to live in, because of the expense; growls over and reduces salaries of our public officers, and the estimates of even its Lunatic Asylum;—acknowledges by no appropriation for its support even the existence of the State University, or the existence of the State Historical Society;—what shall we say of such a State? Is there any herald needed to marshal her the way she is going?

Meanwhile a few gallant men are putting their shoulders to the wheel. They resolve among other good and necessary things that the State Historical Society shall be revived. It is done. They issue a circular and appeal to the educated and liberal people to come forward and assist to further its objects. Any one may become an annual member upon payment of an annual fee of $1. Or by paying $20, one may become a life member. Anything that may illustrate our history, civil, social, political, ecclesiastical, military, industrial will be gladly received. I refer you to the circular for further particulars.

In the reports of Historical Societies belonging to other States, (States which do not let go at the bung and hold on to the spigot) I find that the more the State appropriates to their support, the more generously individuals also. One thousand dollars a year from the State treasury brings two thousand a year in donations and bequests.

I observe too, great activity and liberality among the ladies in behalf of their respective States. They give family relics—books, portraits, letters, even plate that has belonged to some historical ancestor—antique articles of dress and of furniture. Our society is, so far, much beholden to a few ladies up in the West who have the heart and public spirit and patriotism to recognize its claims. Mrs. Rutherford and Mrs. Chambers of Burke county, have sent us valuable books, letters and papers. Their example encourages me to believe that in every section of North Carolina there will arise true-hearted women who will enrol themselves as members, and will send us from time to time everything they can lay hands on likely to be of use and interest. If it should be anything belonging to one of our legislators, so much the better—from a twenty-dollar bill up to his last new suit of clothes, all will be thankfully accepted by the gentlemen of the executive committee. If the legislators will go up to Raleigh and vote an annual appropriation for the society, sufficient at least to pay its freight and express and postage accounts, the executive committee will doubtless consider the propriety of refunding their personal effects.

To pay these necessary expenses, and to have enough to be able to offer to purchase such historical papers as the owners have a right to set a price upon, is all that the society asks. Not one of its officers serves it with any thought of pay. North Carolina is too poor. She is so far down in the world that she could afford last year only eight millions of dollars for her liquor bill. Poor old North Carolina!

O. P. S.

CLUB-AX DAVIS ON THE PRESBYTERIANS.

Southwestern Presbyterian says:

Some years ago, we abridged from the Independent a sermon which purported to be a production of an eccentric Baptist brother in Georgia, who was generally designated as the Reverend Club-Ax Davis. It was so fresh and amusing, that it has been going the rounds of the press ever since. A friend, who not only knows a good thing when he sees it, but who wishes others to enjoy it, too, thinks it good enough to republish, and we accordingly give our readers another chance at it. It may add to their appreciation to let them know that Club-Ax Davis was no myth, but a real personage, who assumed the singular title by which he was known. And that, moreover, the sermon is in his well-known style, and it is quite likely he delivered it pretty much as we find it narrated by the lady correspondent who tells it. She says:

The preacher was apparently about fifty years of ago, large, muscular and well-proportioned. On entering the pulpit, he took off his coat and hung it on a nail behind him, then opened his collar and wrist-bands, and wiped the perspiration from his face, neck and hands. He was clad in striped cotton homespun, and his shirt was of the same material. He had traveled several miles that morning and seemed almost overcome by the heat. But the brethren sung a couple of hymns while he was fanning and cooling off, and when he rose he looked comfortable and good-natured.

He had preached there once or twice before, but to most of the audience he was a stranger. Hence he thought it necessary to announce himself, which he did, as "Old Club-Ax Davis from Screven county, a half-hard and half-soft shell Baptist."

"I have given myself that name," said he, "because I believe the Lord elected me from all eternity, to go ahead in the backwoods and grub out a path and blaze the way for other men to follow. After the thickest of it is cut away, a good warm Methodist brother will come along and take my trail, and make things a little smoother and a good deal wiser. And after all, the underbrush is cleared out, and the owls and wolves are skeered back, and rattlesnakes is killed off, a Presbyterian brother, in black broad-cloth and white cravat, will come along and cry for decency and order. And they'll both do good in their spere. I don't despise a larnt man, even if he don't dress and think as I do. You couldn't pay me enough to wear broadcloth, summer nor winter, and you couldn't pay a Presbyterian brother enough to go without it in dog-days.

"God didn't make us all alike, my brethren; but every man has his own spere. When God has a place to fill, He makes a man and puts him in it. When He wanted General Jackson, He made him and set him to fightin' Injuns and the English; when He wanted George Whitfield, He made him for to blow the Gospel trumpet as no other man ever blowed it; and when He wanted old Club Ax Davis, He made him and set him to grubbin' in the backwoods.

"But my shell isn't so hard but I can see good pints in everybody; and as for the Presbyterians, they are a long way ahead of us Baptists and Methodists in some things. They raise their children better than any people on the face of the earth. Only a few days ago a Methodist class-leader said to me: 'Brother Club-Ax, I was born a Methodist, I was raised a Methodist, and by the grace of God I hope to die a Methodist; but, thank God, I've got a Presbyterian wife to raise my children.'

"And I believe, my brethren, if the Lord should open the way for me to marry agin, I'd try my best to find a Presbyterian woman, and run my chances of breakin' her into the savin' doctrines of feet washin' and immersion afterwards!"

Just at this point he was interrupted by two spotted hounds that had been continually running up and down the pulpit stairs. One of them jumped upon the seat and began to gnaw his coat-tail, in which was something he had brought along for his lunch. He turned slowly around and took him by the ears and tail and threw him out of the window behind him, as easily as if it had been a young kitten. The other took warning and got out as rapidly as possible, though not without howling and yelping as if it had been half-killed.

He then turned to the audience and said, smilingly: "St. Paul exhorted the brethren to 'beware of dogs.' I wonder what he would do if he were in my place this morning? It appears like I am compassed about with dogs, as David says he was."

He had scarcely commenced preaching again before there was a squealing and kicking among the mules and horses that were tied to trees close by. He put his head out of the window and said: "No harm done, my brethren. Just a creetur with a side saddle on has broken loose. Will some brother head the animal? for no sister can walk home this hot day."

Quiet being restored, he continued:

"Well, my brethren, I will now try to say what I allowed to about the Presbyterians. As I said before, they raise their children a heap better than we do. They behave better in church and keep Sunday better, and read the Bible, and learn the catechism better than ours do. I declare, my brethren, their children are larnt that Westminister Catechism by the time they begin to talk plain.

"It ain't three weeks since I was out cattle huntin'—for two of my yearlins had strayed off—and I stopped in at old Brother Hardey's on Round Creek, and took dinner. He is a deacon in the Presbyterian church over thar. Well, as sure as I stand here, my brethren, Sister Hardey had her little gal a stannin' right before her with toes just even with the crack of the floor, and her hands were a hangin' down by her side, and her mouth turned up like a chicken when it drinks, and she was puttin' this question to her out o' that catechism:

"'What are the benefits which in this life do either accompany or flow from justification, adoption and sanctification?'

"Now, the question itself was enough to break the child down. But when she began to say that question all over (for that's the way it was in the book), and then hitch the answer to it, and which, when all put together, made this: 'The benefits which in this life do either accompany or flow from justification, adoption and sanctification are peace of conscience, joy in the Holy Ghost, increase of grace and perseverance therein to the end!' I thought the child was the greatest wonder I had ever seen in all my life. She tuck it right through, too, without balkin' or missin' the first word. And she spoke so sweet, and she looked so like a little angel that before I knowed it the tears was a runnin' down my cheek as big as a buckshot. I've seen the day when I could have mauled and split a thousan' rails quicker and easier than I could larn that thing and said it off like she did.

"Now, my brethren, that child didn't understand or know the meanin' of one word o' that. It put me up to all I knew to take it in myself. But just let that Presbyterian young un grow up and every word of that catechism will come back to her, and her character will stiffen up under it, and she'll have the backbone of the matter in her for life.

"Now, I can't put things into my children that way. Nothing don't stay somehow. It's like driving a nail into a rotten log."

This last remark I never forgot. For thirty years afterward, as I would stand at the blackboard trying to fix rules and principles in the mind of a dull pupil, this remark would come back to me with its peculiar pertinency.

"I tell you, my brethren," he continued, "if our children had a little more catechism and the Presbyterians a little less it would be better for both.

"Then, we don't pray in our families like they do. I know their prayers are mighty long, and they pray all over creation, but, after all its the right way. It's better than prayin' too little.

"Now, my father and mother were good Baptists, and raised their children to be honest and industrious, but I never heard one of them pray in my life, and I was most a grown man before I ever prayed a prayer myself, and it was on this wise:

"There was to be a big meetin' over in Elbert county, and I knowed a pretty gal over there that I wanted to go and see. So I borrowed a little Jersey wagin, which was a stylish thing in them days, and went over to her house and stayed all night, and engaged her to ride to meetin' next day, which was Sunday.

"We went and had a glorious time, and I may as well say right here that she was afterwards my wife; but a comin' home I met with a powerful accident that I've never got over to this day. As I was a comin' down a steep hill some part of the gearin' give way, and let me and the wagin on my creetur's heels, and bein' young and skeery, and not much used to hills, she riggled and kicked and tore from one side of the road to the other till I was pitched headforemost as much as ten foot into a deep gulley, and it's a miracle of mercy that my neck wasn't broke on the spot.

"Expectin' to be killed every minit, I thought I ought to ask the Lord for mercy; but as I had never prayed in my life I couldn't think of the first thing to say but the blessin' my father used to ask before eatin' when he had company, and which was this: 'Lord, make us thankful for what we are about to receive.'

"Now, my brethren, do you s'pose any Presbyterian raised boy was ever put to such a strait as that for prayer? No! He would have prayed for himself and gone off after the Jews and the heathens whilst I was a huntin' up and a gettin' off that blessin'."

A BEAUTIFUL LIFE.

BY MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

There stands before me, framed in a velvet case, the photograph of a lovely young girl. The face is luminous with intelligence and heartiness, it is full of sunshine; the clear eyes, sweet, firm, mouth and candid brow, the dark clustering hair, and the graceful poise of the head, make a picture of rare womanly charm. I have always treasured the picture, but I shall prize it more highly hereafter than I have been wont to, for now it has become all I shall have to recall its original, until I meet her again in the heavenly home. It seems only a day or two since last I spoke with her, when she was a radiant vision of health and youthful enthusiasm; but that was a midsummer Sabbath, and since then, by weeks of patient suffering meekly borne, she has been finally prepared to enter into the fruition of her Saviour's immediate presence and service. As I looked at her pale face in the silent sleep of death, the words "perfect through suffering" came to me with great emphasis. The long reign of pain and fever had changed and matured the countenance, had altered and sharpened its outlines, and yet, even so changed, the sleeper was as fair as she had been in life.

Irene S. Provost was a little more than twenty-one when she was called to "come up higher." The ministry of daughter and sister had been hers, and she had been noted for her fidelity to every home duty, and especially admired for her efficient care of her little brothers from the time when she was a mere child. About six years ago she united with the Bedford Ave, Reformed Church, and from the hour of her conversion, she began to live not simply a consistent, but an aggressive Christian life. A few days after her confession of her own faith, she came to me, asking that I would join her in prayers for two young friends, for whom she was full of earnest solicitude. Not many weeks passed before she had obtained her mother's permission to spend a Sabbath with one of these girls. "I think," she said, "that F—— will soon give her heart to Christ; I want to talk with her." As months and years went on, her work for souls never ceased. She was gay as a bird, cheery, bright, full of fun and vivacity, and always and everywhere her Master's handmaid, wearing His colors and showing her love, as her pastor said in a touching memorial sermon, proudly: We all knew that Irene was a daughter of the King.

None of us who witnessed the simplicity and the courage with which she laid aside her natural diffidence, to lead and take part in our weekly devotional meeting, will forget the lesson the dear child was to older women. As we remember her sitting on Saturdays with her class of poor children around her, teaching them to sew and telling them of Jesus, as we recall her with thirteen little girls around her on Sunday afternoons in that interested eager attitude which tells that the class is drinking in what the teacher says, we feel that her work was well done, and that she will be missed. Not soon will the grief of this little class at her funeral be forgotten. Yet we cannot feel that so beautiful a life is in any sense ended, or even interrupted, by the transition from this room in God's universe to the next, where He had a place for Irene. The peace of God was with her here, as she entered into peace. Her whole life here was but a training for that yonder, where she is inexpressibly blessed, as she dwells in the fulness of joy.

Not a phase of her education, not an experience of her heart, was wasted or lost or in any way dropped out of that plan of God for her individual life, which has simply been carried upward and greatly extended now that she has gone on.

It seems to me that there is an appeal in a life so short, yet so crowded to all young people of Irene's age, to come to the Lord and give themselves to Him in consecration and surrender. If at the beginning of the winter our young men and women, in numbers, would awaken to their responsibility and recognize their high calling, what an immense advantage the Church would receive. It is a sorrowful fact that the children of believing parents are so slow to see their privileges and so remiss in taking up their baptismal obligations. Would that they might see that all below is transient and valueless unless it is sanctified by the blessing of the Most High!

Gleaned from Exchanges:

The Anglican chaplain of Marbeuf, Paris, thinks Father Hyacinthe's movement promises more for the reformation of France than any other. He says to call this movement by a Protestant name would be to kill it, for the people have an unconquerable prejudice against Protestantism.

It may probably be regarded as a further indication of the wish at the present time to conciliate the Poles that certain Roman Catholic priests, exiled to Siberia in the troubles of 1861-3, have been recently pardoned, and allowed to return to Poland. One named Stetsky, who played a prominent part in the insurrection, and was advanced in years, was so affected when the news of his pardon was communicated to him that he suddenly expired.

A number of San Francisco ladies have sent the Pope a pair of white shoes, richly embroidered in gold. The Pope has promised to wear the shoes at the celebration next Easter. In a little speech he made, acknowledging the gift, he spoke as a martyr as well as a prisoner. "These ladies," he said, "are inspired by sentiments like unto those of the women of the Gospel. In like manner as they followed the Saviour at the time of Passion on Calvary, when He was abandoned by all, so do these in their affection towards me, whom they see suffering on this Calvary, and who, however unworthy, am still His representative and vicar."

The Methodists are making preparations for their Ecumenical Council, which is to meet in London next September "to devise means for prosecuting home and foreign religious work with the greatest economy and efficiency, to promote fraternity, to increase the moral and evangelical power of a common Methodism, and to secure the more speedy conversion of the world." Among the topics discussed will be Popery, Paganism, Intemperance, Skepticism and Panperism. The Council will meet in City-road Chapel, the first Methodist church built in England, the pulpit of which was occupied for many years by John Wesley.

Rev. H. R. Hawies, the Broad Church clergymen, has reprinted for the information of his congregation the letter in which he expressed his dissent from the reasons which Mr. Stopford Brooke assigned for seceding from the Church of England. In a prefatory note Mr. Haweis says: "The complaint that intelligent men will not enter the ministry of a Church which was once the intellectual pride of England must be stopped. It can only be stopped by a position being claimed for the clergy in which they are at liberty to plead for truth, comprehension and reform within." Mr. Haweis is angry at being classed with Mr. Stopford Brooke. He remarks: "This bracketing people misleads. I no more agree with Mr. Brooke's repudiation of miracles and the divinity of Christ than with his views on State and Church."

To counteract the influence of the Protestant and State schools in Rome, the Pope has set up fifty-two schools in that city, which have complied with all the requirements of the Italian law. Normal schools, technical and professional schools, primary schools and gymnasia are included in this number, and the Pope contributes $60,000 a year to their maintenance. The bishops throughout the kingdom have been instructed to open schools of a similar character in their dioceses, and to use their influence for the election in the various cities of municipal counselors pledged to substitute clerical for lay teachers. This looks as if the Pope were giving up the weapons from the medieval armories and going into the battle with all the modern armory, and if this be true the Italians will need to exercise all their statesmanship to meet him on this ground.

CHRISTMAS CHEER.

Ere this issne of onr paper reaches all the homes of onr large and happy household, to which it goes as a welcome visitor, Christmas long looked for and wished for will have come. Before another paper is printed and sent out it will have passed. We speak therefore onr words of Christmas cheer this week, and present our greetings, fresh from the press, before the enstomary phrases of conrteons well-wishing have grown stale from freqnent and oft-times thoughtless repetition.

For sincerely and heartily, we wish onr readers one and all, a merry Christmas,—as happy as the innocent dream of childhood may fancy or the ardent hopo of later years may desire.

What a light gilds the day! What romps and pleasures in old conntry halls, with wide bare rooms, blazing fires and hospitable dooral What a softened sheen of radiance crowns the happy hours,—as in passing pleasnres, the memory of past pleasnres fills and thrills the soul. "The time once was," (and one need not be very old to speak thns) when such joys were ours, as now sparkle in the eyes of children, or glow in the face of young men and maidens riant with hope and happiness. If soberer and qnieter be now the pleasure, it is just as real and trne and pure;—as when one enjoys the tenderer fading light of a summer twilight, even more than the gorgeous glory of the sunset, whose lingering splendor still softly illnmines the darkening skies.

Yet let not memory hold too strong a sway, nor find onr joys solely in "joys we have tasted." Give one day to the children. Give this day to the children. It is emphatically the "children's day." Let mirth, chastened with moderation, rnle the honr. Glad are we, that in our Southern home Christmas is still welcomed, enjoyed, anticipated and loved;—when children and servants are remembered and thonghtfnl affection provides some token as a pledge of contInned care and love, and a spnr to flagging recollections. The little stockings that hang by the mantel—(God bless the home where they are)—and the love that hopes for Santa Clans, and the faith in his coming—those things are the happiest of life—and of the day which is the happiest day of life.

There is a duty too from the young to the old. If children mnst he remembered—as they must—so too must the aged. Children mnst not only obey, but honor their parents. Bnt in the general joy and festivity, how often are the old forgotten, passed by or neglected—not wilfnlly perhaps, yet really,—nothing so hurts as to be forgotten—to be not thought-of. It is with us a happy enstom, not yet gone into disuse (and may it never!) for the children to retnrn to the homestead on this festal day. The scattered ones gather under the old roof-tree, aronnd the familiar fireside and at the ample and hospitable hoard. Happy those aged parents who are thus honored and favored, as to see their children and their children's children, and receive thns their antifnl homage and love! And if the circle be nnbroken, what concentred bliss.

But is there a day without a clond,—a year without a life without its shadows and sorrows? How many homes are darkened and saddened even by the bells of Christmas becanse of grief and pain!

"The long dark nights and the snow,"

"O hearts that break and show no sign Save whitening lip and fading tresses," how blessed to know that the loving Father who gave His Son for ns, and lays npon us as He did npon His own Son the hnrden of snffering and distress, gives also strength for the burden and patience nnder the rod! The changes wrought since last the light of Christmas morn gladdened onr eyes and onr heart, have all been wrought in wisdom and in love. The God that gives the snnshine gives the night, and even in the night He gives the blessed dew.

Then let even the homes of sorrow be lightened on this day. Let the monrner rejoice in the "Gift of His Son Jesns Christ." And let each one seek to bring happiness and pleasure to others, and in so doing, the sweetest experiences of the joys of Christmas will be felt. Remember the poor,—the neighbor in town or country whom a word or a smile or a trifling token, wonld make glad not for a day only but for a lifetime. Let the day be one not so much of general gladness only, as of generous feelings and exalted purposes.

And so once again we bid onr readers onr annnal Christmas welcome. Our heart throbs with warm greetings to the scattered abroad, who think of the old North State when Christmas comes. We bid them good cheer. And to the many to whom onr paper is the only weekly visitor,—the humble homes all over the fair State from the mountain side to the lowland, where the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN is carefully laid away on the shelf with the Bible, and the Confession of Faith, and the Psalms and Hymns, (all well worn) and perhaps a Pilgrim's Progress, or a Saints' Rest, or a Communicant's Companion besides,—to all snch we give onr most cordial greeting. To the little children whom we love and of whom we always think as we work,—to the yonng and strong,—to the aged and desolate,—to the sick, the sad, the sorrowing,—to the bnsy, the happy and the nsefnl,—to all, TO ALL, we extend onr heartiest best wishes. May this Christmas, be of all, the best and happiest,—most franght with real joy and peace and blessing, and most fnll of the song of the angels:

GLORY TO GOD IN THE HIGHEST, AND ON EARTH PEACE, GOOD-WILL TOWARD MEN.

One of the most venerable ministers in the Synod of North Carolina made a start last week to see what conld be done for the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN. Resnlt: an increased list and more, we have reason to believe, to come. Our hearty thanks we return for this, and hope will have many like it. Hearty and persistent efforts will increase our list by hundreds.

REV. WILLIAM S. LACY OF ARKANSAS.

We copy from the St. Louis Presbyterian:

"Died at the residence of his son, Capt. W. E. Lacy, near Eldorado, Union county, Arkansas, on the 20th day of November, 1880, the Rev. William S. Lacy, in the 90th year of his age.

"Full of years and honors, respected by a large circle of friends, and venerated and beloved by his family, with a 'heart full of love to all,' and the future 'clear and bright before him' the reward of a well spent life—he gathered the 'drapery of his couch around' and yielded up to the God who gave it as pure a spirit as ever left the confines of earth to ask admittance at the gates of heaven. Of Welsh ancestry, who emigrated to Virginia in the last century, the family seem to have received a high order of intellect by inheritance.

"The Rev. Wm. S. Lacy was born in Prince Edward county, Va., in the shadow of Hampden-Sidney College, and in early youth enjoyed all the advantages of culture which this celebrated school could impart.

"Attaining manhood during the war of 1812 he enlisted as a soldier and served his country faithfully and well. When peace was declared he studied law with John Randolph of Roanoke as his instructor, and his friends who knew him well, in listening to his classic allusions, his epigrammatic utterances, were wont to feel that he had caught inspiration from that extraordinary and gifted man. But his thoughts were turned to a higher and holier profession than that of the law, and he was not to plead for the rights of his fellow man in earthly courts, but to labor for the salvation of souls. In youth he had united with the Presbyterian Church, of which he was now ordained a minister, and removing to Missouri, then a frontier State, he engaged actively in preaching the Gospel and organizing churches. As an evangelist in that State from 1820 to 1831 he gave ten years of the most useful period of his life, with an influence for good which no human estimate can measure. In 1831 he removed to Tennessee, which was his home and the scene of his abundant labors until 1845. He then removed to Union county, Arkansas, the pioneer of Presbyterianism in what is now Ouachita Presbytery, where he continued to reside until his death.

"Mr. Lacy was twice married: his first wife was Miss Sally E. Graham of Lexington, Va. Three of the children of this union survive him, B. T. Lacy, D. D., of Missouri, known throughout the land for his fervid eloquence and power as a pulpit orator; Col. Horace Lacy of Fredericksburg, Va., and Dr. Drury Lacy of Texas. His last wife was Miss Julia Eldridge of Tennessee, who with four children, Capt. W. E. Lacy, Mr. Sterling Lacy and Mrs. Fannie Lester of Eldorado and Mr. Archer Lacy of Ouachita Parish, La., survive him.

"The first years of his residence in Arkansas were spent in the active duties of the ministry, and the people of this State of more than a quarter of a century ago remember the earnest and eloquent pulpit appeals of Father Lacy, even then recognized as the Patriarch of Ouachita Presbytery. But added years brought bodily infirmities by which he was laid aside from active usefulness. In the long years of his retirement no one visited his quiet fireside, or entered the charmed social circle of which he was the centre and pride, without feeling the inspiration of his genius, and realizing that he was in the presence of one whose highest aim was to know Christ and Him crucified.

"But those of his intimate friends, who were accustomed to meet his cordial greeting, to listen to his fervid and eloquent conversation, to be delighted with the wit and vivacity of his playful moments, to witness the grace and eloquence of his manners, his chivalrous spirit, the high finish of his whole character—they can tell how nobly he united the attractions of the scholar, the gentleman and the Christian on whom 'Even God had set his seal to give the world assurance of a man.'

"For the last years of his life he was first partially, then totally blind, but as the objects of earth grew dim around him his mental vision seemed to grow brighter, and as he poured forth his hoarded treasures, drawn from the whole range of ancient and modern sacred literature, bringing them to bear on the passing occurrences of the day, where every syllable was a thought conveying instruction, pointing a moral or enlivening by its wit: he impressed the listener with the idea that he was in the presence of a being of a patriarchal age."

DEATH IN THE MINISTRY.

The Christian Observer says:

"A postal card from Rev. E. H. Barnett, of Abingdon, Va., advises us of the death of Rev. A. L. Hogshead, who was well known and loved in Southwestern Virginia, where his ministerial life for many years was passed. He was also known in all parts of the Church through his little work on 'Systematic Giving to the Lord.' Our correspondent writes: 'It is with deep sadness I have to announce the death of Rev. A. L. Hogshead. He died of paralysis, December 2d, and was buried Dec. 4th. Rev. Dr. Thomas Brown preached the funeral discourse to a large congregation. Rev. Messrs. Wallace, Stuart and Barnett also took part.'"

OUR DRINKING WATER.

The Report of Professor Charles W. Dabney, Jr., State Chemist and Director of the North Carolina Agricultural Experiment Station, for the months of October and November is in.

The importance of the whole Department of Agriculture, and of the work performed by it, is not duly realized. The Monthly Bulletin discusses the following articles:

"Agricultural Bureau; Its Relations to the People," by P. M. Wilson; "The Geological Survey," by W. C. Kerr State Geologist; "Fish Propogation," by S. G. Worth, Superintendent Fish and Fisheries; and the report above referred to.

We intend to read closely all, or most at least, of the above articles, and to increase our stock of information largely thereby, but our special purpose here is to call attention to the Experiment Station heretofore so admirably inaugurated and managed by Dr. Ledoux and now in charge of Professor Dabney. The report gives analyses of drinking waters from various localities in Wilmington, Durham, Goldsboro, Charlotte, Salisbury, Hickory, Raleigh, Lincolnton, Smithville—besides from Edgecombe county and from Lincoln county. The services which the Station will render to the State in this regard alone, when it extends its operations thoroughly will fully repay its establishment; but this service is a small part of its work. Since the last report the Station has made 97 analyses and examinations, distributed as follows: Mineral Waters, 14; Minerals, 22; Seeds, 12; Chemicals, 4; Fertilizers, 10; Drinking Waters, 27; Soils, 3; Marls, 5. The reports on drinking waters show that many of our people are drinking water pronounced as positively dangerous, and very few indeed are using water that can be called wholesome.

It would seem well to heed the advice given to all to ascertain what sort of water they are drinking; to send to the State Chemist for directions how to take a sample of water, and to get from Dr. Thomas F. Wood, Secretary of the State Board of Health, Wilmington, permission to have the water analyzed.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

Every minister in the Southern Presbyterian Church who has adopted for himself the tithe as the minimum of what God requires out of His income, will confer a favor by stating that fact on a postal card addressed to "Elder," postoffice box 31, Blacksburg, Va.

Are there any Sunday laws in North Carolina? If so, is it lawful to buy and sell and get gain on the Sabbath Day? Would not the authorities of Wilmington do well to look aronnd and inquire about this? Would not grand juries do well to look into it?

In plain words, it is reported that on last Sabbath a number of stores in the city of Wilmington were virtually open to trade and hundreds of dollars worth of goods, probably, were sold. Is there a Sabbath law? If not let us have it. If there is let us have it enforced.

The Herald and Presbyter says:

It is suggested that newspaper making ought to be included among current college studies. Just what particular instruction would be given such a class it might be hard to tell, and what special sort of newspapers would be the product of persons so educated it is difficult to imagine. In selecting teachers there would be a large number to choose from, as there are more than can be told who know just how it ought to be done.

A correspondent of the Philadelphia Presbyterian makes the following protest which some of our large and flourishing churches would do well to meditate upon:

"In a late Presbyterian is published this notice:—'The new Presbyterian church at ——, which is just finished, is pronounced to be the finest church building in the Synod of ——. It has cost $40,000, all of which has been paid, and is a stately structure of stone,' &c. I was pleased to see the marks of such prosperity and liberality. But after turning to the minutes of the last General Assembly, and examining the columns of contributions to the Board, I concluded that it was a liberality which was wholly selfish, for not a penny was found reported in those columns. I thought immediately of the weary, patient toilers in the waste places of our own land, and in the dark places in heathen lands, and of the congregations worshiping in shops or schoolhouses, not able to have a very plain chapel even. What heartaches would this flourish of a fine house bring to them! 'The finest church building' in one of our Synods in the centre of one of the largest and oldest States in the Union! 'It cost $40,000,' and not a cent reported for those who have gone from comfortable churches and homes to endure great hardness in laying foundations, on the broad prairies or in mountain wilds, or amid the degradation of idolatrous cities!"

Let it not be forgotten that to many persons there can be no more desirable gift than the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN for one year. Many persons love the paper, and long have loved it, but they are unable to pay for it as subscribers. We put to all who, being unable to subscribe, receive it through the kindness of others for $2 a year. We can and will properly appropriate any funds that may be left with us for such subscriptions.

One does not have to open his eyes very wide to see that the people are seriously taking in the hand the liquor question. We get the following from exchanges.

First, from the Concord Sun:

The best liquor bill we have ever noticed, is sent to the Charlotte Observer by a Catawba subscriber, and after reading it, we do not wonder at the Observer's comments: "we are free to say that we are not in sympathy with the measure." We give the first section of the bill: "Every retail dealer in spirituous liquors shall regularly on the first Monday in each and every month, make a report under oath of each and every sale of liquor he shall make, with the full name of the party to whom sold, to the register of deeds to record the same in a book to be kept for that purpose exclusively. On the same day each retailers shall post a full and correct copy of his report to the register of deeds in a conspicuous place at the court house of his county."

When that bill comes up before the Legislature, it will be laid upon the table by popular vote.

The following news without comment is from the Raleigh News and Observer:

A number of persons interested in the prohibition of the liquor traffic met yesterday in Good Templar Hall to consider the best plan of putting a stop to the widespread evil of intemperance. Rev. Roger Martin, of Robeson, made a speech, explaining the objects and aims of the association.

A motion was then made by Rev. John W. Primrose that a prohibitory liquor law association be organized. Remarks on this were made by Rev. J. M. Atkinson, D. D., Prof. W. C. Kerr, H. A. Gudger, N. B. Broughton and others. The meeting then adjourned until evening.

In the evening a second meeting was held in the hall of the House of Commons, at which an organization was effected under the name and style of the Prohibitory Liquor Law Association, of which the following gentlemen were elected the officers: President Judge E. G. Reade; Vice President, H. A. Gudger; Secretary, R. H. Whitaker; Treasurer, N. B. Broughton.

The following were appointed a committee to prepare and issue a call for a State convention: Rev. Thos. E. Skinner, John A. McDonald, W. C. Kerr, N. B. Broughton and E. R. Stamps.

The following were appointed a committee on ways and means: A. M. McPheeters, J. J. Litchford, J. S. Allen, L. H. Adams and Geo. W. Wynne.

Thursday, January 6th, was designated as the day for the meeting of the proposed State convention.

An adjourned meeting of the Prohibitory Liquor Law Association was held in Commons Hall last evening. A large number of persons, some seventy-five, became members of the association, making the total membership here some one hundred and fifty.

Judge Reade, the president, made a speech of some length and of great vigor, in which he gave a thorough description of the purposes of the movement. In the course of his remarks he stated his belief that the people of the State would approve of the measures for the prevention of the liquor traffic.

Captain E. R. Stamps, by request, read the call for a State convention January 12. He made a very able and earnest speech in favor of the movement, taking the practical view. Dr. Skinner, following, gave some interesting facts in regard to the anti-liquor law in Maine, its practical benefits, etc.

On motion of Mr. H. A. Gudger, a committee was appointed to draft a bill to be presented to the Legislature. It was decided that a provision of the proposed bill should prohibit the sale of liquor for ten days before the election should the amendment be placed before the people for ratification.

SUGGESTED THOUGHTS IN CONNECTION WITH A MEETING OF SYNOD.

The evangelization of the colored race was discussed.

One brother suggested that our work among the negroes should be wholly disinterested. We should seek their good in every point of view. We should go among them and work with them as we have opportunity, and so conduct ourselves as unmistakably to show that we do not despise them and that we do not seek thereby to aggrandize ourselves or our Church. Unselfish labor out of a sincere regard to promote their welfare, should be the motto. While he was uttering these Christian sentiments to attentive listeners one was overheard by the writer to suggest, in a whisper, that the speaker was a Radical. He seemed to think that a Southern Democrat would hardly feel thus toward the negro. But it was pleasant to see that every speaker earnestly desired the good of the black man. They seemed to have given the subject much thought and prayer; but only two propositions satisfactory to those who propounded them seemed to have been reached. One of these propositions was that all our efforts for the negro being fruitless, it was right for us to let them alone until there was a way opened for our working to advantage among them. The other proposition was a plan for the evangelization of the colored race, which will be considered next week. OBSERVER.

THE "FRIENDLY REMONSTRANCE."

MR. EDITOR:—I read the "Friendly Remonstrance" in your last issue with some interest.

It is to be regretted that one who is so "proud of our Presbyterian nursery at Davidson;"—"proud of its standing, its scholarship, its usefulness and its modesty;"—and who so rejoices in the "high standing of its graduates abroad," should appear to use such studied skill in lowering the high appreciation which the public might possibly derive from the compliments of its friends. Witness what is said about the one year Ph. D.'s "fumbling around a German University," as if a Doctorate of Philosophy from the highest German University indicated no more than one year's "fumbling round" it. This, we say is to be regretted.

But still more is it to be regretted that this admiring friend, who is so "proud" of the work done at Davidson, should seem to depreciate questions of fact when offered in the interest of Davidson College. Witness what is said about one of the faculty representing the culture of "a New York school."

Would any reader of your paper, Mr. Editor, suspect that "a New York school" thus mentioned, apparently in derision, is, in fact, one of the first Scientific Institutions in America?

Possibly the author of the "Remonstrance" was not aware that "R. B." in his article did correctly call the Institution above referred to the "New York School of Mines" or that fact may have been overlooked; in either case the mistake of course was only accidental.

THAT "FRIENDLY REMONSTRANCE."

The tenor of the article under the above caption indicates by no means obscurely that the removal of the bushel measure was not so pleasant to its author as to some others. Yet it was done gracefully and in excellent taste. Dr. Hepburn's address, both in matter and manner, was very far from anything like vulgar boasting It is equally evident that R. B. did not excite the correspondent's unqualified admiration by his testimonial. Indeed C. P. S. seems inclined to a little raillery at the expense both of Davidson and the bushel-removers, and she calls it "A Friendly Remonstrance;" but against what does she remonstrate? The italics incline the reader to the opinion that it is against the immodesty of publishing the merits and claims of Davidson. But this cannot be the case, for every one is aware of how frequently C. P. S. has used her fluent pen in behalf of Chapel Hill. We have too often enjoyed her graceful and interesting articles on this subject to imagine for one moment that she condemns or considers immodest this one short article on the merits of Davidson. Moreover we cannot suppose that C. P. S. doubts the truth of Dr. Hepburn's statements. His character and her long acquaintance with him render this supposition, even more unreasonable than the former. Moreover R. B. is not apt to make mistakes in the columns of a newspaper when writing upon a subject which has been his life-work. He certainly is too accurate to blunder where information is so accessible and refutation so easy. If he has misrepresented the antecedents of the Davidson faculty it would be a very simple thing to set him right. But, after all, C. P. S. does not seem to dispute the truth of his statements, but is rather inclined, in a bantering way, to question the obvious inference from them and to consider this foreign culture as very small potatoes after all. However, we are inclined to the opinion that she is wasting her wit in poking fun at the degrees of German universities. The world will obstinately persist in believing that they mean something notwithstanding, and that to have Ph. D. from Leipsic, Gottingen or Heidelberg is some proof of scholarship, even though the student should have talents, application and previous preparation sufficient to obtain it in "one year's fumbling round a German university." Prof. Latimer happens to be such an individual: he graduated under Gildersleeve, pursued his studies with enthusiastic assidnity for five or six years, and then "fumbled around the German University," but the result is not surprising to any one who knows Gildersleeve and Latimer. C. P. S. may have seen humbugs in the laboratory; she says so and we do not question the fact, but still we believe that the degree of the German universities is of some force notwithstanding.

As to the breeding in and in, we agree most heartily with R. B., and think that a college is doing a poor business that turns pupils from the class-room into the professor's chair; water cannot rise higher than its own level, and if an institution of learning wishes to be progressive it must bring its streams from a higher source than its own fountain.

R. B. is the last man to follow such a suicidal course; he has at least pursued a very different one in the past. We think that it is not at all necessary for a man to have been a graduate of a college to understand the "points and needs," or to have "love, pride and undying interest in it." The faculty of Davidson prove this. We agree with R. B. in thinking that this faculty was wisely selected; notwithstanding the fact that they come from colleges out of the State. We are proud of our State and love her, but we cannot for all this think that her University is equal to those of Germany, or even some others in the United States. We do not think that a judicious state pride ought to think so. We would like very much to see it take this position, and hope that at some time in the future it will fling to the four winds of heaven all trammels; will allow nothing to interfere with competition for its chairs; will ask only what are a man's qualifications, and not where he was born, or to what church he belongs, &c.; will cease to be influenced by denominational claims and denominational squabbles; will take in the full character of a university in which men can acquire a special and extended training, which the colleges cannot give; will have the colleges in the State as feeders to her, and their training necessary to enable students to appreciate and improve her opportunities. When her various faculties of law, medicine, science, &c., shall be distinguished and crowded with large classes, then she will be lifted above the rivalry of colleges, and we may venture to praise what C. P. S. calls a "church nursery" without calling forth a "friendly remonstrance."

In the meantime let the friends of Davidson continue to do for it what has been so abundantly and wisely done for Chapel Hill: publish her claims and make the public acquainted with her merits. Keep the College before the people. IMPARTIAL.

THE CHILDREN'S NEW YEAR'S OFFERING FOR SUSTENTATION.

OFFICE OF HOME MISSIONS,
BALTIMORE, Jan. 1, 1881.

Dear Children: Another year, with its manifold mercies, has rolled away since we addressed you on this subject, and we come again to ask you to remember and help the poor in our land in their efforts to obtain and support the ordinances of the Gospel. We thank you for what you have done in former years, and hope you will take pleasure in continuing to aid in this good work.

Instead of asking you, as heretofore, to contribute to the whole sustentation, cause, we have determined to lay before you the matter of church erection as the object of your effort. We propose that all the children of the Church shall at this time try to do something to help our weak churches to build houses of worship. We have about one hundred feeble congregations, which are anxious to obtain buildings in which they may meet to worship God, and are only waiting until they can get help to enable them to do so. They have no place of their own where they can hold Sabbath school or assemble for Divine service, and are too poor to buy a lot and build a house all by themselves. During last year the Executive Committee helped a number of such churches, which are now happily and thankfully worshiping God in their own sanctuary. But we were compelled, for want of means to decline to help many more than we were able to aid. Most of these congregations are in country places or newly-settled towns in the Southern and Southwestern States; their people are poor, their churches weak, and if they can obtain houses of worship they will be encouraged to go forward and work for the upbuilding of Christ's kingdom.

We suppose that most of you have never known a time when you did not have a comfortable church and Sabbath school to go to. You will, therefore, know how to pity those not so highly favored as yourself, and will feel like doing your best to help in this great and noble work. We hope that every Sabbath school will join in this effort, that every child will give something to promote it, and that when we come to sum up all your little gifts we shall have at least five thousand dollars as the children's New Year's offering. You will not think this too much to expect when we tell you that this letter is addressed to seventy thousand children in nine hundred Sabbath schools, besides many children in our Christian families who are not able to attend Sabbath School. If you shall raise this amount you will secure the erection of from twenty to thirty new church buildings in the next few months, and will thus do great things for the cause of Christ and the growth and strengthening of our beloved Church.

Wishing you a happy New Year and many blessings from our gracious Lord, we remain,

Very truly your friends,

RICHARD MCILWAINE,
J. LEIGHTON WILSON,
Secretaries.

Ministers, superintendents and teachers of Sabbath schools and Christian parents will confer a favor by assisting in this effort.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Studies in the Mountain Instruction, by Rev. George Dana Boardman, author of "Studies in the Creative Week," "Studies in the Model of Prayer," &c. D. Appleton & Co., 1, 3 and 5 Bond street, New York. This book consists of fourteen lectures, nine of which were delivered in the Association Hall, Philadelphia, Pa. Its style is marked by the characteristics of oral address. The print is good and the marginal references are excellently arranged. The design of the book is to so bring out teaching of the Sermon on the Mount, so as to present Christian Ethics as the foundation stones of society. We think the author has been very successful.

The North American Review for December has the following: The Future of the Republican Party, by George S. Bontwell; Discoveries at Olympia, by Prof. Ernst Curtius; National Sunday Observance, by James Freeman Clarke; Southern Statesmen and Their Policy, by John Jay; The Ruins of Central America; Disiri Charnay; The Distribution of Time; Dr. Leonard Waldo; The Public School Failure, Richard Grant White; The Validity of the Emancipation Edict, Aaron A. Ferris. A bright, erratic, unreliable, mischievous magazine.

The Boy's King Arthur, being Sir Thomas Malory's History of King Arthur and his Knights of the Round Table. Edited for boys, with an introdnotion by Sidney Lanier, editor of "The Boy's Troissart." Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. Our boys ought to be most familiar with the romance of Albion's King Arthur, "most to be remembered emonge us Englysshe men tofore al other crysten kynges." The wonderful Scandinavian legends, such as the Niebelungen-lied; the fabulous stories of Charlemagne and his famous Paladins, and the romantic histories of Celtic Arthur and his Knights of the Round Table, furnished the matter and scope and life of mediaeval poetry and true chivalry and civilization. English literature and culture breathe the spirit and power of Geoffrey and Layamon and Malory's rehearsals of this poetic and national myth. It is good now, "in one of the sweetest and strongest books in our langnage" to dwell in the atmosphere of chivalry with genial Sir Launcelot, or sad Sir Tristram, and others gentle or brilliant or hilarious, and learn to honor woman, admire beauty, dare noble deeds, and above all rejoice under the light and sign of the sacred Cross of Christ. So, most welcome is this careful contribution of Mr. Lanier, so fully illustrated and annotated.

Epochs of Ancient History—Troy: Its Legend, History and Literature, with a Sketch of the Topography of the Troad in the Light of Recent Investigation. By S. G. W. Benjamin, M. A., with map. 16mo. $1. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. 1880.

Picturesque Arizona, being the result of travels and observations in Arizona during the fall and winter of 1877, by E. Conklin, Representative of the National Associated Press and Artist and Correspondent of Frank Leslie's Publications. Publishers 143d street and 3d avenue, New York. $2.

Col. C. G. Hammond has added to his previous gifts to the Chicago Congregational Seminary, amounting in all to nearly $40,000. $20,000 more, conditioned on the raising of $60,000 additional before May, 1882. This $80,000 is intended to constitute a Professorship Endowment Fund, the income of which shall be used in making up the deficiencies, and equalizing the salaries of the professors. —Christian Union.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

PRESBYTERIAN (SOUTH).

Rev. W. C. Campbell, supplying the Presbyterian church at Harper's Ferry, Va., is reported as having declined a call to the Presbyterian church, Frederick, Md., under the Northern Assembly.

The Presbytery of New Orleans, as we learn from the Southwestern Presbyterian, at a pro re-nata meeting held on Tuesday, 14th inst., received Louis Voss, candidate under the care of the Presbytery of Newark (North). After one examination he was licensed. The First German church then laid before Presbytery a call to Mr. Voss to become their pastor. The call having been placed in his hands and accepted by him, order was taken for his installation on Sabbath, 19th inst. The Moderator will preside, propose the constitutional questions, and deliver the charge to the people; Rev. F. O. Kœlle will deliver the charge to the pastor, and Rev. Dr. B. M. Palmer will preach the sermon.

Items from the Christian Observer:

At Anchorage, Ky., ante-communion services, Rev. Dr. Blanton and Rev. E. W. Redinger preaching. Seven additions, and meeting will be continued.

Mount Zion church, in the coalfields west Elizabethtown, Ky., has had a blessing. The pastor has been aided by the presence of Ruling Elder J. W. Hopper, and some six or eight have expressed hope of salvation.

There were four or five additions to the church at Rockport, Ky., two weeks ago. The assistance of Mr. J. W. Hopper was of material service in the meeting.

Rev. Calvin L. Stewart, of the graduating class of Columbia has been ordained and installed pastor of New Harmony church, Enoree Presbytery, for half his time. The other half is to be occupied at Piedmont church, where he is soon to be installed. The ordination sermon was preached by Rev. J. Y. Fair. Charges were delivered by Rev. C. B. Stewart and Rev. A. P. Nicholson.

The address of Rev. E. W. McCorkle is Williamson's, Alleghany county, Va. He is preaching at three points—Williamson's, at Oakland (near Low Moor furnace) and at a point near Long Dale furnace.—Central Presbyterian.

Rev. John Ruff, pastor of Peak's church, in Bedford county, Va., writes to the Central Presbyterian:

"Peaks church was destroyed by fire on 12th of December. The fire originated from a defective chimney. This is the church where 'Fathers' Turner and Mitchel preached so long and so acceptably, and were instrumental in saving so many souls. We were struggling to build at Buford sville, in the bounds of the congregation, and now we are left without a house of worship."

CONGREGATIONAL.

A Vermont member of the National Congregational Council says that the real question before the Congregational churches "is not the Creed question, it is not the question of ministerial standing—it is the question of the pastorate." Three-fourths of the churches of that denomination have either no pastors at all or only "acting pastors." What to do about it is the perplexing question.—Presbyterian.

Rev. J. A. Dobson of Muncie, Ind., has left the Universalist church and united with the Congregationalist. He says Modern Universalism is a pretext for Atheism.

BAPTIST.

It is a strange fact, says Dr. G. J. Johnson, that while there are 30,000 colored people living in Delaware, there is but one colored Baptist church, of perhaps thirty members, in the State—one Baptist for every one thousand colored people.

INDEPENDENT CATHOLIC.

The Rev. J. A. O'Connor, pastor of the Independent Catholic church in Madison avenue at Twenty-eighth street, appears to be accomplishing something more than an ephemeral work among people of his nationality and former faith. About a thousand persons—one-half of whom, we are told, are Roman Catholics, or at least were such not long ago—make up his congregation, and he seems to preach the gospel to them in its simplicity and power, and also to give them advice calculated to make them good parents and worthy American citizens. That Father O'Connor has a pretty firm hold on their respect and affection and that the movement has other and more permanent elements of strength, seems quite evident. Otherwise the opposition which it has called out, as well as the considerable time which has elapsed since its origin, must have brought it to nought.

PRESBYTERIAN (NORTH).

A committee appointed by the Presbytery Emporia to visit the Nez Perces Indians in the Indian Territory, organized a church known as the Presbyterian church of Oakland, Indian Territory, of ninety-three members. Jim Horn, Jay Gould, and Red Wolfe were elected elders. On October 21st Rev. S. B. Fleming baptized fifty-nine of them, and on Sabbath, November 7th, thirty-four more, and ordained the three elders. The Lord's Supper was administered on Sabbath afternoon, Nov. 21st to the whole church, more than two-thirds of the tribe being present.—Presbyterian.

The Second Presbyterian church, Chicago, having lost Rev. Dr. J. Munro Gibson, who has betaken himself to England, now calls loudly [$8,000] to Rev. John S. MacIntosh, of Belfast, to come over to Chicago and help them. Dr. MacIntosh made his mark at the recent Presbyterian Council. He was pronounced by those who heard him the peer of the foreign preachers visiting America.—Christian at Work

The Presbytery of West Virginia at its adjourned meeting at Clarksburg, Nov. 17th, suspended Rev. Geo. M. Fleming from the gospel ministry for conduct unbecoming a minister of the Lord Jesus Christ.—Baltimore Presbyterian.

METHODIST.

The Rev. H. W. Featherstone is the lately appointed assistant editor of the Pacific Methodist. He is in charge of the "Los Angelos Department."

The Richmond Christian Advocate says: All the financial interests of the Virginia Conference advanced the past year. The missionary collection moved up. The Conference collections paid from 97 to 100 per cent. of assessment. The educational advanced several hundred dollars; there was a decided looking-up in the salary of the preachers. Intelligent piety, good church-officers and diligence on the part of these and the pastors, and we shall improve in the coming year.

EPISCOPAL.

We regret to learn that Rev. R. B. Sutton, D. D., who has so acceptably served St. Barnabas Episcopal church for the past two years, has decided to leave us. He goes to Louisburg to take charge of the Episcopal church at that place.—Greensboro Beacon.

St. John's Episcopal church, at Pleasantville, Westchester county, N. Y., was crowded to its utmost capacity on Thursday evening, December 2d, the vestry having granted its use for the ordination and installation services of Rev. Manfred P. Welcher, as pastor of the Presbyterian church in that village.—Presbyterian.

It is said that Miss Sarah Smiley, the preacher, has joined the Episcopal Church.

Sir Henry Bessemer, the inventor of the new process for manufacturing steel, has had the freedom of the city of London conferred upon him. Though it has often been given to princes, statesmen and warriors, he is the only discoverer thus honored, excepting Dr. Jenner and Sir Rowland Hill. He has taken out 114 patents. Before his process was introduced into Sheffield the entire manufacture of steel was 51,000 tons a year; now it is 830,000 tons. Formerly it required from two to three weeks, at a cost of £50 or £60 a ton; now it takes but fifteen or twenty minutes, and costs only £6 or £7 a ton.

An artificial surface, suitable for skating, and behaving very much like natural ice under a skate-iron, has been formed by a mixture of the carbonate and sulphate of soda. The crystalline mass is spread on a floor, and may be used as a skating rink, and will last indefinitely with slight repairs. It "cuts up" like ice, and when too rough, may be smoothed again by a simple steaming apparatus.

Prof. Nordenskjold found, contrary to what has been generally believed, that vegetable and animal life flourish with great richness in the depths of the Arctic seas. Notwithstanding the low temperature and deficiency of light, these seas, he says, contain a fauna as rich in individuals as the tropical seas. The specimens of fossil plants which were collected also testify to the existence of a vigorous vegetable growth during the coal, jurassic, cretaceous, and tertiary periods.

Rev. Geo. F. Pentecost, who left his Boston church, the Warren Avenue Baptist, to engage in evangelistic work, now returns to a pulpit, and leaves the Baptist denomination for Congregationalism, having accepted a call to the Tompkins Avenue Congregational church, Brooklyn. We have no doubt Dr. Pentecost will be abundantly successful in his new relation, and that he will enjoy the freedom with which he will welcome Christians of all denominations to the Lord's table.

Notwithstanding the sufferings of English laboring people the price of greyhounds holds its own. At a recent sale ten dogs brought 711 guineas, the highest being sold for 400 guineas, the lowest for ten guineas. This is not in excess of former sales, Bedlamite and Peasant Boy, two well known hounds, each having brought 500 guineas, and for Master McGrath probably the most famous dog ever bred in England, his owner, Lord Lurgon, was offered the sum of £4,000.

From $1,000,000 to $2,000,000 worth of birds' nest are yearly imported into Canton, most of them coming from Java. They are very expensive, costing from thirty to forty dollars per pound. The nests are composed of pure gelatine, secreted by a species of swallow and deposited against a wall.

An alarm of fire at midnight is a startling thing, but not half so startling to many who hear it as would be the sudden knowledge of their own dangerous physical condition. The catalogue of the Bingham school for the year is before us. The roll contains 247 names, representing 12 Southern and 4 Northern States, South America, Europe and Asia—so that FOUR CONTINENTS are represented.

There has been a steady increase from 103 in '76, 123 in '77, 142 in '78, 166 in '79, 189 for the year ending June 1st, '80, to 247 for the year ending December 15th, 1880; and those who know say that the discipline and instruction are much better than ever before. We congratulate the School upon this unprecedented success. See advertisement.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. W. SHERAR, 149 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

In this issue Laurinburgh High School is offered to the patronage of the public. It is situated in a remarkably healthy section and among a church-going people Methodists, Baptists and Presbyterians have churches in the village. The patronage is so increasing that dormitories are being built on the Academy grounds.

A faultless family medicine that mothers can rely upon for their children and for themselves. Corrects acidity of the stomach, cures colic, regulates the bowels, is a purifier and tonic to the whole system, and is given with safety and the happiest results to the most delicate infants. Children, as well as adults, eat sometimes too much supper, or eat something which does not digest well, producing sour stomach, colic or restlessness—a good dose of Simmons Liver Regulator will give certain relief.

"I have used Simmons Regulator in my family for eight or ten years, and found it to be the best family medicine I ever used. I have used it in most cases when my children had diarrhœa, colic, headache You may say it is the best family medicine I ever used for anything that may happen. I have used it in indigestion and found it to relieve me immediately after eating a hearty supper. On going to bed I take about a tablespoonful and never feel the effects of the supper eaten. OVID G. SPARKS,

In Pender county, N. C., October 29th, 1880, Mrs. AMANDA ORMSBY, wife of Mr. John C. Ormsby, aged about 54 years.

Although it was hard for her many friends and relatives to give her up, God saw fit to call her home, and they have the blessed hope that she has entered the heavenly rest. She had been for many years a member of the Presbyterian church. May her God comfort the bereaved family.

Wilmington Journal and Star are requested by the writer to copy.

Near Cameron, Moore county, on the morning of December 4th, in the 24th year of her age Mrs. FLORA M. WORTHY, beloved wife of Mr. S. B. Worthy and daughter of Mr. D. McIntyre.

In the death of this estimable Christian lady our little church in Cameron has lost one of its brightest ornaments. She was an exemplary Christian, of ardent, active piety. Affectionate and kind to all, and much beloved by all who knew her. Her end was peace. She leaves a kind and devoted husband, a loving father, and many other friends to mourn her untimely end. May He who has seen fit to afflict, comfort the hearts of the afflicted ones.

On the afternoon of Sunday, Dec 12th, 1880, at the residence of Mr. B. S Hedrick, in Georgetown, D C., Mrs. ELIZA J. THOMPSON, of Chapel Hill, aged about 69 years.

Mrs. Thompson was a daughter of the late Rev. Elijah Graves, formerly and for many years a useful minister of Orange Presbytery, but at the close of his life residing in Mississippi. She belonged on her mother's side to the Stamfords and Mebanes, and had intermarried in the Morrows and Thompsons—all names that have given Orange county some of its most respectable Presbyterian citizens. For thirty-one years she has been a resident of Chapel Hill, a woman of much energy and business capacity, and with a strongly marked individual character. Of her six children who reached maturity, but one survives her. All of them but two were members of the Presbyterian Church, and she herself in the last hours of a lingering illness expressed a hope in the same Saviour whom so many that she loved had found precious. C. P. S.

November 30th, 1880, in Yanceyville, N. C., Mrs. GERTRUDE NEAL.

On Sunday morning this lovely Christian lady was engaged in her morning devotions, kneeling at her baby's crib, when her dress caught on fire. She struggled with the flames for a moment, then fled down the stairway and was met by her husband and friends, who succeeded at last in extinguishing the fire, but not until it had done its deadly work. She was burned too severely to recover, and lingered until Tuesday morning, when the gentle spirit took its flight.

Mrs. Neal was one in whom there were united a bright, joyous temperament and great gentleness and sweetness of disposition. With all the buoyancy of youth, and with marked decision of character, there was the blending of the deep-toned but unostentatious piety that shed its softening and refining influence over her whole nature, and her warm-hearted and amiable disposition won for her friends in every circle. She bore her sufferings with great resignation, and when she knew she could not recover, met death with a calm peace that plainly showed that she was fully prepared for it and had obtained the victory over it. "If this be death," she said, "then certainly there is great sweetness in it." She expressed a natural desire to live for the sake of her devoted husband and babe, but submitted it entirely to the will of her Heavenly Father. Sadly indeed will her sweet voice and winning manners be missed in the happy household cheered by her presence; but in their gloom they have the precious assurance that she has gone to her blessed rest to be a worshiper among the redeemed above.

"Blessed in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." H. T. D.

FOR THE FAMILY.

What the Flowers Say.

The red rose says, "Be sweet,"
And the lily bids, "Be pure,"
The hardy, brave chrysanthemum,
"Be patient and endure."

The violet whispers, "Give, .
Nor grudge nor count the cost,"
The woodbine, "Keep on blossoming
In spite of chill and frost."

And so each gracious flower
Has each a several word,
Which, read together, maketh up
The message of the Lord.

How the Mission-Box Grew.

"Never walk again, never walk again!" Oh, the cruel words, how they echoed and re-echoed and saucily rattled through the elm-boughs around a roomy, bright New England home. Lydia Ferguson sat in the great cushioned chair with lowering brow, tear-drops chased each other down her pale cheeks and her lips quivered with a great sorrow.

Oh, how dark the world looked, dark and dreary and lonely and yet the velvety mosses and dainty lichens were still in sight clinging to the great door-yard, bearing their delicate treasures of scarlet caps and waxy cups and hanging beauties; the ground pine still crept and vined and grew in winsome loveliness near by. As Lydia's breath grew short and her bosom heaved at the haunting words, the spruce and arbor-vitæ breathed their balsamic odors upon her, the cedar and juniper fanned her with their fragrance, but they failed to cheer her; they might smile and dance and send forth sweetest perfume but they could not put her upon her strong, young feet again, her graceful tipping, busy feet. Her nerves never tingled at the blue-bird's song, she had liked to hear him but that time had passed; he sang a doleful song now—"never walk again"—even the tree-toads and the whippoorwills copied after him chanting the refrain, "never walk again."

Lydia Ferguson was only thirteen years old. She had lived entirely in the sunshine until that dreadful fall from the great elm tree had injured her beautiful form for life. She had been like a "pet lamb" frisking in a sunny meadow under a shepherd's tender care, but for several weeks, yes months afterward, she had felt like a poor forsaken sheep up in the cold bleak mountains alone.

The Heavenly Shepherd was watching over her with tender, pitying eyes. His hand was outstretched, but Lydia was unconscious of it; she did not want to be led over such a rough road. The summer passed, the long, cold New England winter lagged by, and Lydia was still unreconciled. But the sweet spring was surely coming; the brooks began gurgling; the sweet violets starred the meadows; the pretty hepaticas awakened and the trailing arbutus put forth its fair pink buds. Surely nature was awakening after her long sleep, covered with white blankets. Would Lydia awaken too?

Lydia spent most of her time now in a softly cushioned rolling-chair; she could push herself over the pretty, even lawn in front of the house, but when she wanted to go further it was brother Tom's strong arms or Dora's firm, slender ones which pushed the easy-chair for Lydia.—Through the broad, wooden paths they rolled her along so that she could catch the first sweet breath of early spring time. Great bunches of pretty flowers they gathered for her, and laid upon her lap or wreathed about her fair wavy hair. Starry anemones peeped forth from her head, while Tom gathered red columbine bells from the rocks to mix with Dora's snowy trilliums—all to be given to "poor Lydia."

There was one place very near Lydia's home to which she had never been since her affliction, and that was the beautiful church where she had once loved to go. She had a certain pride which kept her from being wheeled to the church where she had formerly gone with quick and graceful steps; however, one Sunday to the great astonishment and delight of the family, she announced her intention of attending service. They did not comment much upon her decision; her father merely bent his head and tenderly kissed the white forehead, gently stroking the golden hair. Her mother only smiled a sweet impressive smile as she tied the daisied leghorn under her darling's chin.

Their own minister did not preach that eventful Sunday, but a missionary occupied the pulpit; one who was thoroughly alive and perfectly conscious of the responsibility of his position.

His discourse was not lengthy, but he talked rapidly and to the point; he seemed to take in the full meaning of the words, "Go ye into all the world," etc., and he impressed his hearers powerfully. Many who had thought heathen lands inaccessible, far away like the planets, felt that many golden opportunities had slipped while dreaming, brothers and sisters had closed their eyes in that long dreamless sleep which knows no wakening until all shall be called to stand together before the Great White Throne.

A lofty influence overshadowed Lydia as she listened, under whose mighty power and deformity dwindled into insignificance. The missionary's glowing words opened her heart as the warm summer shower opens leaf and bud and blossom.

"Never walk again," receded into the background of her brain. "Souls to save," came to the front.

"What is my lameness to compare with countless souls going down into eternal darkness?" she questioned herself.

"Mother," she asked, "can I have all I can earn by my thin pale hands?" holding them before her mother as she spoke.

"Why, my dear, you do not need to earn money; if there is anything you desire, speak the word; father is able and willing to gratify you."

"But I want to earn the money mother; I want it for missions."

"We contribute a certain sum yearly my dear; a very generous amount."

"But I must do something. I would be happier, mother; I have been laggard long enough."

"But what could you do, dear; your eyes are not very strong?"

"Leave that to me, mother, please. I will promise not to tax my eyes."

So Lydia obtained permission, and when Tom and Dora were through with their day's work she had them wheel her down into the garden, and there she unfolded her plan.

Next morning, as she sat near the outer gate, Winnie Morris, a widow's only child, came and leaned over the fence. She was a lovely little one, with bright blue eyes, luxuriant hair and dimpled cheeks, but as her mother was very poor her dress was faded and too short for her.

"Come in, dear," called Lydia, and as the child quickly obeyed the request she asked her if she would bring wild flowers from the woods and brook near by. Winnie was delighted to gather the flowers and afterward to watch the graceful fingers arrange them into lovely shaped bouquets.

"Winnie, would your mamma be willing you should carry these flowers up to the Mountain House?"

"I'll run and ask her."

Winnie came back with the desired permission, also with happy face because she had on her very best dress—not a very intricate affair, being only a simple steel-colored print with rosebuds sprinkled all over it. The child looked very pretty, however, if her feet were bare and brown, for they were plump and clean and pretty. She carried the dozen nosegays up to the hotel, returning in half an hour with empty basket and eyes bright as stars.

"Here's the money, Lydia. I sold them for five cents apiece, as you said, but I didn't have enough, and I promised I would come again. May I, Lydia?"

"Yes, Winnie; you are a good little girl; here is ten cents for you; that will leave fifty cents for the mission-box."

This was the starting point. Every day Winnie's little feet tripped up to the Mountain House, the little hands carrying dewy bouquets, returning with empty basket and pocket of money. Every day she carried some change given her by Lydia home "to mamma," until the sweet spring flowers had all performed their pure mission and were gone. But summer also laid her perfumed beauties all about them, and little Winnie's feet tired not, neither did Lydia's fingers. "It is so sweet, mother, to work for Jesus; but I have not long, not very long." And Mrs. Ferguson's heart throbbed with agony at the thought, "not very long."

So the beautiful New England summer passed and with it the brave young life which had taken up the burden so sweetly and patiently, and had done "what she could." The treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions never knew why a certain church's contribution to the spread of "living bread" had so wonderfully increased; but the great Head of the Church knew, and could the sweet, pale lips have opened, they could have told you a sweet story of a noble soul which had thrust its own sorrow backward so that feeble hands could hold up the "light" in the foreground.—Christian Intelligencer.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Sketches of Famous Men.

CINCINNATI EDITORS.

An exchange gives these:

Richard Smith, the editor of the Cincinnati Gazette, is blue-eyed, auburn-haired, genial, keen and kind. He speaks like an intellectual torpedo, and he loves sunshine. He thinks that the first commandment is, "Let there be light." He likes green peas with his roast canvas-back, and sleeps like a kitten on a warm log.

Murat Halstead's face is full and of a pink and white freshness; the eyes are gray-blue; the nose is plentiful, and the mouth is shaded by a silvery moustache which matches his hair. He is liked by all men who know a "good fellow" when they see one. He is sometimes stern, but his good-natured smile gives him away. He is a sturdy gentleman, and selects polite and expressive words with edges on them. He is the well known editor of the Cincinnati Commercial.

AUDUBON.

John James Audubon, the ornithologist, spent many years of his life in the forest searching for birds. He studied their habits and sketched them. Once after a long sojourn in the forests he arrived at Niagara Falls. His appearance and deportment were quite in contrast with the crowds of well-dressed and polished figures which adorned that celebrated resort. His dress, which was made of leather, stood dreadfully in need of repair. A worn-out blanket was buckled to his shoulders; a large knife hung on one side, balanced by a long rusty tin box on the other, and his beard, uncropped, tangled and coarse, fell down upon his bosom. He had a quick glancing eye, an elastic, firm movement, and a sharp face.

He pushed his steps into the sitting-room, unstrapped his little burden, quietly looked around for the landlord, and modestly asked for breakfast. The host at first drew back with evident repugnance at the apparition which thus proposed to intrude its uncouth form among the genteel visitors, but a word whispered in his ear speedily satisfied his doubts. The stranger took his place among the company, some staring, some shrugging, and some even laughing outright. Yet there was more in that single man than in all the rest of the throng.—Christian Intelligencer.

GEORGE III. OF ENGLAND.

George III. possessed all the accomplishments which are required for doing business as business is done by kings. He talked foreign languages like a modern prince of the blood. and he wrote like the master of every one with whom he corresponded. The meaning of the brief and blunt confidential notes in which he made known his wishes to an absent minister never failed to stand clearly out, through all his indifferent spelling and careless grammar. Those notes are detailed at almost every minute from eight in the morning to eleven at night, for, as long as work remained on hand, all hours were working hours with the King. Punctual, patient, self-willed and self-possessed; intruding into every department; inquiring greedily into every detail; making everybody's duty his own, and then doing it conscientiously, indefatigably, and as badly as it possibly could be done; he had almost all the qualities which enable a man to use, or misuse, an exalted station, with hardly any of the talents by means of which such a station can be reached from below. If he had been born a private gentleman his intellectual powers would never have made him a junior lord of the treasury; but his moral characteristics were such that, being a king, he had as much influence on the conduct of affairs as all his Cabinet together. A Frederick the Great without the cleverness, he loved his own way no less than his German brother, and got it almost as frequently, with this difference in the result, that in the score of years during which he governed according to his favorite theory he weakened England as much as Frederick ever aggrandised Prussia.—Trevelyan's Charles James Fox.

Mosses.

Meek creatures! the first mercy of the earth, veiling with hushed softness its dintless rocks; creatures full of pity, covering with strange and tender honor the scarred disgrace of ruin, laying quiet finger on the trembling stones to teach them rest. No words that I know of will say what these mosses are. None are delicate enough, none perfect enough, none rich enough. How is one to tell of the rounded bosses of furred and beaming green, the starred diversions of rubied bloom, fine-filmed, as if the rock spirit could spin porphyry as we do glass—the traceries of intricate silver, and fringes of amber, lustrous, arborescent, burnished through every fibre into fitful brightness and glossy traverses of silken change, yet all subdued and pensive, and framed for simplest, sweetest offices of grace? They will not be gathered like the flowers, for chaplet, or love-token; but of these the wild bird will make its nest, and the wearied child his pillow. And as the earth's first great mercy, so they are its last gift to us: when all other service is vain from plant and tree, the soft mosses and gray lichen take up their watch by the headstone. The woods, the blossoms, the gift-bearing grasses, have done their parts for a time; but these do service forever. Trees for the builder's yard, flowers for the bride's chamber, corn for the granary, moss for the grave.—Ruskin.

Anecdote of Webster.

The Rev. Dr. S. K. Lothrop, who was Daniel Webster's pastor in Boston for more than thirty years, says in a recent letter, concerning his visit to Mr. Webster on the day after his son, Major Edward Webster, was buried:

"It was approaching dusk; the light in the room was a struggle between the fire-light and the waning light outside. He came into the room with a subdued, yet grand and solemn air. Our greeting was a silent pressure of hands, and we sat down. I did not feel that it was for me to speak first in his presence, and he did not speak, and I watched his face. He looked at me, not as expecting or demanding that I should speak, but as if my simple presence was an expression of sympathy grateful to him. At length, after the silence seemed to me to become very oppressive, though I suppose it did not last very long, he turned to me and said, 'I feel at this hour, Mr. Lothrop, that all that gives dignity and glory to man is contained in the religion of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, and I could wish that on my tombstone at Marshfield, where I hope to be buried, after my name and the dates of my birth and death, there might be simply this inscription, 'He was a believer in the Gospel of Christ,' the best thing that can be said of any man.' He then went on, I of course having only a very secondary part in the conversation, to speak of the strength and comfort which his Christian faith afforded him, and then of Christ's wonderful life, character and instructions as a help, guidance and inspiration to anyone who would so pass through this life as to be prepared for a future and higher life."

Lawyers Under Peter.

Peter the Great of Russia was a monarch of large views but invincible prejudices. He loved his country, and longed to see it take higher place in European history. He saw clearly that progress could be made only by the introduction of new industries and by skillful training and mechanical labor.

To forward this end he visited in disguise the older nations of Europe, made himself acquainted with their forms and industry, and worked as a common mechanic at various trades.

He sent, also, numerous young men of promise to great cities in other countries, to acquire skill in the mechanical arts, and to become teachers of their countrymen.

But, while honoring all well-trained mechanics, he had a rooted contempt for lawyers. It puzzled him to understand how they occupied high positions in England and France. They multiplied quarrels, he said, and fattened on the life-blood of others. Vexed at the high esteem in which they were held elsewhere, he vented his wrath in the memorable threat:

"I am thankful I have only two lawyers in my empire. When I return I mean to execute one of them."

Could Anything be Funnier?

Rev. W. Porteus, among his pencilings of travel in the St. Louis Evangelist, sketches this scene:

"One incident about Poughkeepsie and I will pass on to other scenes. A train started from New York, on the Hudson River Railroad. When it stopped at Yonkers an old gentleman aboard asked the conductor, 'Is this Poughkeepsie?' The conductor replied, 'No.' For several stations the same question was repeated. At length the conductor said: 'Sir, if you will stop teasing me about Poughkeepsie, I will tell you when we get there.' The old gentleman agreed to the proposition; the train sped on; the conductor forgot his promise. When the train was a mile or two beyond the place, he remembered it; rang the bell, stopped the train, had the engine reversed, and the train backed down to the depot, shook the old gentleman by the shoulder and said, 'Come, get out; we are at Poughkeepsie'. The old gentleman looked up innocently and said: 'I do not want to get out.' 'Why did you keep asking at every depot if this was Poughkeepsie?' Why,—I—am—not—in—good—health, —and—when—I—was—leaving—home—my—daughter—told—me—to—take—a—pill—when—I—got—to—Poughkeepsie.' A sold-out look, a sudden jerk at the bell-rope for the engine to go ahead, strides as long and as fast as O'Leary's, coat-tails streaming in the air, was the last picture taken of the conductor in that car for some time. I will leave the reader to imagine the true inwardness of the man of brass buttons and nickel-plated punch while I am pointing my pencil to portray other scenes."

Carpet Patterns.

Carpet patterns may with advantage have a geometrical formation, for this gives to the mind an idea of order or arrangement. When the pattern has not a geometrical basis, a general evenness of surface should be preserved. Carpets are better not formed into "panels," as though they were works of wood or stone, but should have a general "all over" effect, without any great accentuation of particular parts. The Indian and Persian carpets meet this requirement. While a carpet should present a general appearance of evenness, parts may yet be slightly "pronounced" or emphasised, so as to give to the mind the idea of centres from which the pattern radiates. A carpet should, in some respect, resemble a bank richly covered with flowers; thus, when seen from a distance the effect should be that of a general "bloom" of color. When viewed from a nearer point it should present certain features of somewhat special interest; and when looked at closely new beauties should make their appearance. As a floor is a flat surface, no ornamental covering placed on it should make it appear otherwise. A carpet, having to serve as a background to furniture, should be of a somewhat neutral character. Every carpet, however small, should have a border, which is as necessary to it as a frame is to a picture.

STATE NEWS.

Raleigh has a Prohibitory Liquor Law Association.

The Carolina Central Railway Company have reduced their passenger fare to three cents per mile for round trip tickets when purchased of the station agents.

The North State Press of Washington, N. C., says that the steamer Cotton Plant was burned on the 11th inst. while lying at her wharf at Tarboro. The boat, with one hundred and ten bales of cotton, was consumed. She had been plying the Tar river for twenty years. Another steamer will be built to take her place.

Judge Gudger remarked the other day, we hear, that Wilmington was one of the busiest places he had ever seen, but the declaration was called forth in this instance by the frequency with which jurors asked to be excused on the plea of business.—Wilmington Star.

Two thousand five hundred pounds of seed cotton to the acre on land near Floral College.—Lumberton Robesonian

Jute is now being cultivated to a considerable extent in the eastern part of North Carolina. A sample raised by a farmer near Newbern has been sent to the Cotton (newspaper) office in New York, and that journal says it is rated at being worth from four to five cents a pound, or from eighty to one hundred dollars a ton.—Norfolk Virginian.

Dr. Benbow says cotton will pay better in Guilford than wheat or corn, and fully as well as tobacco. He raised this year, on six acres, 1,600 pounds of lint, which he sold for $168 to W. H. Hill of this place. He estimates his cost of cultivating and picking at $43. He paid only $1.75 per acre for the land and says next year's crop will give him the entire amount expended on the land and labor. He says there is plenty of land in this county just as good which can be bought for the same money.—Greensboro Beacon.

Patrick Donan, Esq., formerly editor of the Raleigh Sentinel, is said to be deranged and his friends propose to place him in a private asylum. He resides at present in Deadwood, Dakota.—Raleigh Star.

They have put an elephant on the monument erected to the memory of King, the keeper of the elephants in the menagerie, who was recently killed by one of the pets at Charlotte, N. C. This is a new idea, and not a bad one, either, only it may lead to some confusion a thousand years hence among the archeologists of the dim and distant future—for who knows but when they dig up this tombstone they will not at once set us down as belonging to the Siamese, and worshipers of the white elephant, a belief that will be reinforced by the historic fact that North Carolina was the home of the Siamese Twins?—Richmond State.

During the year it will furnish to its readers the productions of the most eminent authors, above-named and many others; embracing the choicest Serial and Short Stories by the Leading Foreign Novelists, and an amount

Unapproached by any other Periodical

THE LIVING AGE is a weekly magazine giving more than

The importance of THE LIVING AGE to every American reader, as the only satisfactorily fresh and COMPLETE compilation of an indispensable current literature,—indispensable because it embraces the productions of

"Gives the best of all at the price of one."—New York Independent.

"Its frequent issue and ample space enable it to give all that the very ablest of living writers furnish to periodical literature on science, history, biography, philosophy, poetry, theology, politics and criticism, and to add to this the full complement of the best that there is in fiction."—The Interior, Chicago.

Ministers will have the book (in cloth) sent for $2.00, and in Morocco for $2.75 in addition to their subscriptions. Publisher's price $3.00 and $4.00 respectively.

The Publishers say:

"Presenting as it does the carefully prepared Essays of some of the ablest scholars in the Presbyterian denomination—a denomination which has long been noted for the brilliancy of its intellectual achievements as well as the earnest zeal of its piety—this work will not only be full of interest but will also stimulate thought, awaken inquiry, and give thorough discipline to the intellectual powers of its readers. Dealing in a clear and forcible manner with topics of vital interest, forming an encyclopedia of Presbyterian Doctrine, and bringing within the compass of a single volume the rich results of the close thought and careful study of many of the ablest men of this strong denomination, it will undoubtedly be one of the most valuable contributions to Church Literature which has been made for many years.

"This Report will be published in one large 8vo. volume, containing over 1,000 pages; and will be nicely printed on tinted laid paper, neatly bound in cloth, with covers ornamented with black and gold representations of the beautiful shields of the Church organizations of different nations, with which the large hall in which the meetings were held was decorated.

"Every Book will contain ten pages of BEAUTIFUL COLORED ILLUSTRATIONS representing the emblems of the Church Organizations of the different nationalities which participated in the Council. These designs formed the decorations of Horticultural Hall, in which the meetings were held, and the pictures, which we have obtained from costly plates, add materially to the beauty and value of the Report."

EXTRACTS FROM A YOUNG LADY'S LETTERS HOME.

NEW YORK, December 10th, 1880.

The Metropolian Mnsenm is decidedly the art collection of the city now. Miss S. and I finished onr second survey of it on Satnrday. The first large hall as yon enter is set apart for sculpture and oriental porcelains. We passed through this and up stairs to see the "Loan collection of paintings," in the West gallery. But I had to stop before the grand reclining statues of Semiramis and Cleopatra, which are directly before yon as yon enter the door. Who would believe, unless they saw it, that colorless marble could express so mnch. This representation of Semiramis is exactly my idea of a great queen, even to the careless and elegant arrangement of her hair. "She was neither dull nor sluggish, nor despondent, who rnshed from her toilette to quell the insnrrection of a mob, her hair floating loose on her shonlders. That the old historians notice that it was dishevelled is a pretty good proof that four thonsand years ago women used to wear their hair 'tncked up.' We may be sure that Semiramis led the fashions whatever they were." (What great writer have I quoted?)

Of the works of art on the staircase I examined only a large and wonderful mosiac picture of the Pæstum at Rome. We went through halls filled with paintings hy the old Masters. My taste in that direction is hardly more cultivated than it was. A picture of Herodias with John the Baptist's head, by Da Vinci is soft and clear as all his are. I love to look at Richards' forest scenes better. So green and cool and charming. The cases and cases of rare objects of art,—of excavated antiquities, of specimens of china ware from all parts of the world, of Egyptian cnriosities, of laces—are amazing to behold.

One gallery is devoted to Sanford Gifford's pictures alone. He has lately died. As yon look rnnnd the room the same hand can be recognized on every pictnre. They are nearly all landscapes. A kind of lnminous mist seems over them all. "Claverack Creek," (or "Indian Summer") represents hrightly tinted autumn leaves from the overhanging trees floating down a clear mountain stream. "Sunset on New York Bay" is my favorite—just as we saw it from Greenwood.

We took quite a long walk in Central Park after leaving the Musenm; saw the statne of Hamilton recently unveiled. It looks to me as if in white granite. We strolled rnnnd by the Ramble, the lakes, (frozen hard) and up the terrace and through the Mall. Stood still to admire two fine bronze statnes of Scott and Burns opposite each other at the head of the Mall. Both in sitting position; Scott's dog lying at his feet.

* * * * *

And so Mrs. H. did not admire the vase I sent yon. I am sorry her taste is so nncultivated. You know that is all we artists can say in reply to you critics. That peculiar shape is just now very fashionable, and those dark grounds that yon think so odd are thought partionlarly artistic. My vase painting and all was pronounced a success at Cooper, whatever Chapel Hill may say. And you are perfectly welcome to despise painted satin ware, bnt if you could only go rnnnd here and see the painted cnshions and bags and boxes and toilette articles of exquisite fancy and finish, and every conceivable article of lnxnry that could be made of satin, yon would change your mind I know.

* * * * *

Your notion for next Commencement is very good—bnt I should shrink from undertaking it unless I could be sure of success. However this would not be one alone, it wonld have to be the work of a crowd, and yon know I shall be only too glad to help in any way I can. If it can really be carried out as you suggest, all North Carolina will say it was beautiful.

* * * * *

December 13th:—Don't think I am giving up my reading. I don't intend to, I see all the city papers, magazines, &c., &c., and have now in hand Cooke's "Lectures on Transcendentalism" lent me by Mrs. A. They are very fine, bnt pretty deep wading every now and then. Shonld like to get that book of Trevelyan's on Fox; have just read a review of it!

* * * * *

I have been out looking at the Christmas preparations in the shop windows. The Christmas cards this season are more beautiful than ever, and more expensive. Prang's prize cards rather disappointed me. The one for which he paid the designer $1000, represents a choir of snrpliced boys singing. The price is $1. If yon study it a long time yon find it grows npon you. I am glad the artist who got the thousand dollars was a woman.

Macy's windows are a show. There is always a crowd on the sidewalk in front of them. One window has a representation of the story of Cinderella; dolls acting; the rats and mice and the pumpkin and all. Another window has the "Babes in the wood." Another has a doll theatre. * * * I just stay and stay in the great book stores and devour the books. Francis Ridley Havergal's poems with colored illustrations is a gem; "Indian Summer" a collection of choice poems from the best poets beantified with all manner of brilliant autnmn bonquets: A grand illnstrated edition of Longfellow (price from $20 to $30); Irving's Sketch Book charmingly illnstrated. No nse trying to mention the thonsandth part of them. The children's books are especially dainty. As to the fancy stores and their holiday gifts, they are simply distracting in their profnsion, and variety, and elegance. There is a dollar book store on the corner near ns where they give prizes with each hook. A sort of lottery, where for instance yon may get a piano, or a china tea-set, or a ten-cent tin horn. Such places as that ever tempt me.

* * * * *

I went last Friday night, and hitter cold night it was, to the Young Men's Christian Association hall to a lecture. A fine hall, well-warmed, brightly lit, and well-filled—good mnsic (organ and drnm) and a good lectnre by Dr. Vincent on, "That boy's sister." The modern girl is a snbject on which it is easy to be either sentimental or sarcastic. After the lectnre we went all over the building. The gymnasium was a novelty to me. Twenty or thirty men were cntting antics on poles and ropes &c., nnder direction of a teacher, leaping, jnmping, climbing, &c., &c. Plenty of ladies and gentlemen looking on. Then into library, reading-room, parlor, &c., all handsome and substantial. What is not done for the good of yonng people in New York? From there Mr. A. took me to the Everett House on Union Square, where I was to spend the night with Mrs. W.

* * * * *

The reason why I have not written abont my crayon drawing lately is very likely, that as it got harder I did'nt have so mnch praise as at first, and therefore had'nt so mnch to say. However, I have been hard at work, and Mrs. Carter wrote "good" on three of my sketches last week. We are kept extremely busy just now, for in addition to our nsnal work Mrs. C. has the class in perspective drawing for the month before Christmas; and there is no play in it. I am looking forward to the Christmas week of vacation as eagerly as I ever did at Peace.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

WHAT IS REALLY THE MATTER AFTER ALL?

I am provoked to act as nmpire in the settlement of this question, because I see there is no other way to settle it. The Interior's contribntors have gotten matters so mixed that it is somewhat donbtful whether even I can furnish a solution that will be perfectly satisfactory to all interested parties. However, it is incnmbent on me to give the right solution, not the satisfactory one. "Let ns hear, then, the conclusion of the whole matter." Speaking with exclusive reference to our own Presbyterian Church, lack of fruitfulness attending the ministry of the Word is dne to the petalyzed condition of our evangelistic arm which has for its distinctive fnnction aggressive work. We have comparatively few evangelists and as a rule they are men whom their Presbyteries have made evangelists because they could make them nothing else. (N. B. Note the emphasis on "as a rule." Each particular evangelist is at liberty to regard himself a noble exception.) How often does the evangelistic department gain recruits in this way:—A young man leaves the Seminary unprovided with a call. He goes before his Presbytery and is licensed. He then goes to and fro in the earth, and walks up and down in it and finds no church that appreciates his gifts. At length some kind friend, who sees more in him than the "nnthinking masses" have seen, moves the Presbytery to ordain him as an evangelist. No sooner said than done, and he is sent out into destitute regions, probably to feeble churches that can not pay for the services of a man after their own heart. The next step is for the Presbyterial Committee of Missions to write a pathetic letter to the Assembly's Committee praying for money to support this very worthy and very needy yonng brother who is occupying a large and important field which ought not to be given up. After the field has been long occupied and is apparently "nothing hettered, but rather grows worse," the Presbytery concludes that the soil is not adapted to Presbyterianism, and would willingly give it np to other denominations, but then what wonld they do with their evangelist? He is doing no good and they do not expect him to accomplish anything, but he must continue to have a field of labor or he cannot draw any pay. Theoretically speaking, it is the doctrine of our Church that "ordinary vocation to office in the Church is the calling of God by the Spirit through the inward testimony of a good conscience, the manifest approbation of God's people, and the concurring judgment of the lawful court of Christ's house." According to the "Book," a call to the Gospel ministry is a threefold call of God by the Spirit, testified (a) by the man's conscience (b) by the people of God (c) by the lawful court of Christ's house. Practically, it is our doctrine that the people of God have no voice in the matter, rather I should say practically, the "lawful court of Christ's house," often sets its seal to the supposed call in the face of a contrary verdict rendered by God's people; they, by the ceremony of ordination, proclaim a man called who, after due trial, has failed to gain "the manifest approbation of God's people." Why not ordain and license at the same time? Because at the time of licensnre the evidence of a call is not conclusive; it lacks one element, viz: "the manifest approbation," &c. The licentiate is sent forth to try his gifts, and his ordination is, theoretically, suspended on the result. Practically, no matter what the result, ordination will follow in the conrse of time. After fair trial shonld his gifts fail to indnce any organized body of God's people to declare to the Presbytery the convietion that they have been edified thereby, and earnestly desire to exneience future benefits from his gifts, theoretically the Presbytery will accept such failure as proof that the man's conscience and the lawful court were mistaken in supposing there was a call from God. Practically the Presbytery will accept such failure as proof that God has called him to be an evangelist, to preach to those who must hear him or nobody. The Presbytery excogitates its theory free from the bias of emotion; it determines its practice under the influence of strong feeling. Preachers are greatly needed. Here is a yonng man of fine parts, good character and thoronghly trained in the school of the prophets, perhaps at the Church's expense. It would be a waste of material—good, well prepared material—to throw him overboard. He will certainly do no harm, and there is no apparent reason why he shonld not do good. "For such there is no law." Henceforth he is an evangelist and probably spends a long ministerial life giving "rest to the churches ronnd about." There are very few men in the evangelistic department whose gifts are such as to command a good salary and a settled home. The Presbyterian Church is expending its vast resources of wealth, of learning, of oratorical ability, of consecrated genius and fervent piety in cultivating the favored plots where the seed has already taken root. There are comparatively few nnconverted persons in onr pastoral charges, and these few, with the important exception of the children of the Church, are the least hopeful class from which to expect fruit. The pastor preaches from January to December to the same little handful of people, sowing over and over again the same little plot of gronnd, where the various kinds of soil have already become clearly manifest. All the good soil is bearing fruit, and that which is not bearing has been thoroughly tested and proven to be "wayside, rocky and thorny." The pastor has looked into the faces of his nnconverted hearers too many years and preached at their hearts too many sermons to expect any new manifestations from them. He has seen them pass through revival after revival, and resist religions influences as strong and as tender as any that he can hope to bring to bear upon them. Is it wonderful that the ministry of the Word should be barren of results, when we lay ont nearly the whole of our strength where the most credulous faith can hope for very little fruit, while we leave the vast fields "white already to harvest," to be reaped by nnskilled labor, and precious little of that? One of the last pathetic utterances of Dr. Duff was, "The Church is merely playing at missions." Such is sadly true in respect to home missions.

CLARK.

Micro copic holiness is the perfection of excellence. If a life will bear the examination in every hour of it, it is pure indeed. To live by the day and watch each step is the true pilgrimage method.—C. H. Spurgeon.

CHRISTIAN INFLUENCE.

There is nothing so fruitful of good as a Christian life. A Christian may be unable to preach, or even to offer a prayer in a public place, bnt he can, by a godly walk and conversation, show forth Christ in his life. Such a life leaves its imprint npon society, the family and the church. The first impulses of yonng persons to acknowledge Christ often come from it. The habits, tastes and aims of many can be directly traced to it, especially when such influence is exerted in the home circle, by a wise and faithful father or mother. How often can we trace success or failure in life to good or bad influences. Parents often fail in the training of their children, because they do not rise to a proper conception of their responsibilities until they are brought to see habits formed and desires growing in their children which, unless restrained and corrected, may bring them to shame and disgrace.

This failure to exert a good influence may bring disaster to the community in which we live. We have not only church and family responsibilities, but civil obligations. A nation is made up of individuals, and, like the individual, has a character which may be determined in the same way, by the estimate in which he is held among others. If, in a community, a majority, or a large number of individual members, exert a highly moral influence, the public sentiment of that community is so evenly divided as to put it in our power to turn the scales, and establish the influence of society for good or ill report.—Canada Presbyterian.

BE OF GOOD CHEER.

Though tangled hard life's knot may be,
And wearily we rne it,
The silent touch of Father Time
Some day will sure nndo it.
Then, darling, wait;
Nothing is late
In the light that shines forever.

We faint at heart, a friend is gone;
We chafe at the world's harsh drilling;
We tremble at sorrow on every side,
At the myriad ways of killing,
Yet say we all,
If a sparrow fall,
The Lord keepeth count forever.

He keepeth count. We come, we go,
We speculate, toil and falter;
But the measure to each of weal or woe
God only can give or alter,
He sendeth light,
He sendeth night,
And change goes on forever.

Why not take life with cheerful trust,
With faith in the strength of weakness?
The slenderest daisy rears its head
With courage, yet with meekness:
A sunny face
Hath holy grace
To woo the sun forever.

Forever and ever, my darling, yes—
Goodness and love are undying;
Only the troubles and cares of earth
Are winged from the first for flying,
Our way we plough
In the furrow "now!"
But after the tilling and growing, the sheaf;
Soil for the root, but the sun for the leaf—
And God keepeth watch forever.

—Mary M. Dodge.

THE JOY OF IT.

It is not enough to be simply religious. If one has made a profession of his faith in the Saviour, and placed himself rightly in connection with the Church, there is a comfort in the thought that he has so far done his duty. But it will be but a barren pleasure after all. He is entitled as a Christian to a good deal more, and he is required as a professor to give himself no rest till he has gained it. A part of his heritage is joy, which means much more than a mere dull reflection that he has set himself right with the commandment.

And yet it is surprising how many people live and die without anything more than this mechanical relation to the Church, and heavy, gross, everyday experience. They have not so much as learned that there is aught better than what they have been accustomed to. Sometimes, indeed, they have been glad of things concerning religion. They have had joyful thanksgivings over some enterprise or good work, and their hearts have been filled with praise because of successes in schemes which had enlisted their sympathies. But there is a higher and better joy than this. It is the joy of the Lord. It comes to the souls that live near him—to all that rest in his love. —United Presbyterian.

HOW THEY GOT A MINISTER.

They came to a little village church and heard him. He preached a good sermon. He was reverent in manner; his church services were all orderly; everything moved smoothly. They quietly inquired about him of his own people, and there was but one answer: he was all that a good minister and pastor should be. Then they mailed him a little note. Their vacant pulpit had been placed at his disposal the first Sunday of the following month; their people wanted to hear him. They would give him $50 for preaching, and to pay all expenses. To their surprise, and with a long list of applicants in their hands, from D. D.s to S. T. D.s, they got this reply:

"No, brethren, I cannot come and preach to you. I am not a candidate for your pulpit. I would not leave my church for another, unless Providence pointed the way. Somehow I do not believe the way lies in the direction of appearing before a congregation of strangers and preaching on trial." I did this once. After that I heard I was not quite tall enough; my coat did not fit as it should; my necktie was awry, and I learned that this was 'not accidental, for it was just so in the evening.' In the first part of my sermon I spoke 'too loud,' in the latter part 'too low;' I gestured too much with my left arm; I was 'too nervous' in my manner. My sermon in the morning 'was rather too analytical;' I did not pray for the success of evangelistic work in the evening, although I had in the morning; and there was more of the same order. Brethren, I then said, 'As for myself no more candidacy.' Now, if you want to hear me, I shall be happy to welcome you to my church; but I have no idea you will come. My necktie is still awry at times, and sometimes I omit to pray for evangelistic work in the evening. But my people put up with all these and other serious deficiencies, and having learned in whatever state I am therewith to be content, I am satisfied to continue to preach for my people. If you ever want to hear me, come and welcome to my church; the sexton will give you a good seat."

The committee found they could not move the mountain toward Mohammed, so four Mohammeds kindly went to the mountain. They heard that minister. They gave him a call; he went to preach for them to see how he would like them, as the church, and not he, was the candidate. He preached; possibly his necktie was a little awry; possibly he omitted to pray for evangelistic work in the evening. Be that as it may, he accepted the call, was installed, and is now a successful minister.—Christian at Work.

THE SECULAR AND THE RELIGIOUS.

Thomas Hughes, in one of his American lectnres as reported in Good Literature, says of Dr. Arnold of Rnghy:

"The snbject he used to speak more earnestly than anything else npon was the danger of attempting to sever the secular and the religious in life. He spoke and preached over and over again on that snbject, and it is, of course, one of the most supreme importance to impress upon yonng men. It should be instilled into them that there is nothing so dangerous as to endeavor to divide their lives in that way; to say that a certain portion of their lives shall be called secular, in which they are bound by one set of rules and principles, and that there is another portion which is called religious, and which has to do with other things, into which enters another set of rules, and another dnty is to occupy it. I think that perhaps we owe more to him than to any one else for the teaching of religious things with secular during the past thirty years. The scientific, the agnostic element was not nearly so strong in his day; yet he was assailed by it on the one hand, and on the other by the older High Church spirit. But he never yielded at all in any way, bnt for ns, his pupils, made the battle; and I believe his early teachings have saved many of us, in these trying times, from sacerdotalism on the one side and agnosticism on the other. And especially wonld I refer to his method of teaching the highest subject of all—the way in which men can approach that greatest subject in the world—the question of the existence and nature of God. He taught us boys, and I think most of us have never forgotten it, that the only way to approach that great subject was the method which God himself has pointed ont to ns in Revelation. There it shows ns that God communicated with all human forces, and we read in the Bible of births and deaths and of all human interests, how men lived and how God dealt with them. There is nothing there to lead us intellectnally into paths where it is almost impossible for men to find a firm foothold. Only one firm foothold he used to teach us, and that is the foothold which rests upon God, as made manifest in the flesh, and revealed to us in the New Testament. With that rock nnder yonr feet yon can approach all those deep questions which are stirring men's minds so tremendously in these times."

TRUE PRAYER.

The effectiveness of prayer does not, in any measnre, depend upon its finency, or its grammatical accnracy, or its rhetorical finish—or the length, the volnme, or solemnity of the voice with which it is nttered. A prayer may be perfect in all these qualities and yet be nterly ineffective. Effectual prayer is that which is wrnng out of the heart by a sense of need, and offered in a spirit of faith—a "belief that God is and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him." The man who has this sense of need and the spirit of faith may hesitate and stammer in his nttterance; he may be faulty in the grammar and rhetoric which he employs; he may be as brief and informal as Peter was in his prayer, when he found himself sinking beneath the waves of Galilee; he may not have voice enough for him to be heard by any human ear, bnt he will command the ear of God, and he will have assnred to him the sympathy and help of God in that thing for which he prays. That which the Psalmist says is eternally true, "Delight thyself in the Lord and he will give thee the desires of thy heart."—Zion's Herald.

THE MINISTRY FOR THE TIMES.

The idea that a minister is to be content to preach and pastorally visit the occnpants of pews in his church, and wait for the rest of the community to come in, if it ever had a footing anywhere, may now be dislodged. Ministers have to be missionaries, if they are ever to keep their places as ministers. The population shifts. People do not get seats, or even present letters, "of course." They have in too many instances to be won, persuaded, instructed and influenced for their good. It is being made plain that vital religion is not a thing of which men feel the need as they do of trade and the means of living. The sense of that has to be created, or at least stimulated; and this ministers must do, if they are to make way. The very same aggressive methods employed by living and energetic missionaries in cities and in heathen lands must be employed in many a state, county, town and village over the land. And there is no real difficulty to true ministers in the effort. Indeed, looking at the numbers of member and hearers in many congregations—as reported in "minutes" and elsewhere—one wonders what many clergymen do to fill up their time. A church of fifty members might all be visited easily once a month, which is unnecessary. The spare time ought go to the gathering in of those who "go nowhere."

The effect of a pastor being seen at this work is worth more than a sermon on his own people, who are often enough at "their ease." The moral influence of a man who might do what he is not attempting is steadily weakened over the people who observe him. They do not always know just what is wrong, but they feel the need of something more being done, and the feeling becomes articulate at length in the clamor for a new man. Self-preservation; interest in the denomination which gives a minister his standing; regard in many instances to the aims and objects of the "Board" or other body that helps in supporting; a wise regard to one's own moral, spiritual, and in some instances even bodily health; and above all, regard to men's souls and concern for the will of our Father in heaven—all these combine to urge ministers to an aggressive, honest, kindly, persistent home-missionary work, each in his own borders.—Dr. John Hall.

TEMPERANCE AND LEGISLATION.

Canon Farrar, in a recent address entitled "Temperance and Legislation," published by the National Temperance Society, referring to the cry so often made, that "You cannot make people sober by Act of Parliament," says: "Gentlemen, it is not true that you cannot, to an immense extent, make people sober by Act of Parliament. You can; it has been done over vast tracts of America. It is being done in wide areas of our colonies. It is done in hundreds of our English parishes where the land-owner has the wisdom to shelter his people from crime and panperism by the simple rule which he, on his single authority, can make, and make unquestioned, bnt which hundreds of poor men and poor women and poor children on his estate cannot make, however passionately they may desire it, and however deeply it affects their social, moral and religions welfare—namely, that there shall not be a single liquor-shop on his estate. Not make people sober by Act of Parliament! Why, at this very moment, to their immense benefit, yon are making 20,000 people, among whom are the very worst drunkards in England, not only sober by Act of Parliament, but absolnte teetotallers! Who are these? Why, they are the poor prisoners now in our prisons, not one of whom from the day that he enters prison, is allowed to tonch a drop of alcohol, and who, in consequence of this restriction, are as a class, in spite of all their other disadvantages, so completely the healthiest class of people in England that there is a lower rate of mortality among prisoners than there is among professional men, and that as the death-rate stands highest of all among publicans, who sell alcohol, so it stands lowest of all among the prisoners, who are absolntely deprived of every drop of it."

FROM HOME.

The way a professional Christian behaves himself from home tests him and reveals him in his true character. He is then ont of the ruts of conventionality and habit. He acts himself. If he is prayerless in spirit, he shows it hy neglecting the forms that kept his conscience quite at home. If his heart secretly longs for nnhallowed pleasures, he goes after them. If he prefers the society of the gay and worldly to that of the quiet and spiritnally-minded, he shows it in the choice of his associates.

SELF-ESTEEM NEEDED.

A reasonable amount of self-esteem is necessary to secnre a man's success in life, and there are few characters into which it does not enter to a great extent. We laugh at our neighbors; their foibles and absnrdities excite our amnsement, because we consider ourselves superior to the like weaknesses. Their troubles cause ns distress; but do we not grieve for others in proportion as we are able to put ourselves in their place, and picture what we shonld feel nnder the same circnmstances? The reciprocal regard for one another's interests, the mntual esteem, the exchange of kind offices, which constitute friendship, find their chief source, too, in self-love. If we have been inclined to esteem any one ever so highly, let it bnt be whispered in our ear that that same person does not think mnch of ns, and we immediately find out that he is not nearly so charming as we had imagined, and that his good opinion is not, after all, worth having. On the other hand, among our acquaintance there may be an individual whom we consider both weak-minded and ignorant, and think, in fact, quite beneath onr notice. Wait a little; it comes to onr knowledge that this same creature whom we have been despising has an immense admiration for us. All our ideas change directly, and we discover all his hidden merits; he has at least powers of discrimination, and is some judge of character. We like our neighbors much more for the virtnes they find in us than for any we discover in them; whether we choose to acknowledge it or not. But it is perhaps in the passion of love that the very alcohol of egotism is to be found; lovers never weary of each other's society as long as they can keep up the intensity of mutual admiration; their tete-a-tete are always interesting, for they perpetually talk about themselves, and should their love be crossed, both would probably rather that the loved one should be miserable than indifferent. They are completely ruled by the self that rules the world.

We look back to former times and the struggles that then were, and wish we had been helpers in the fight; but there is honorable warfare now, and if we see not what must be done now, or have not the courage to do it if we can see, neither should we have had vision or courage then.—T. T. Lynch.

It is a high, solemn, almost awful thought for every individual man, that his earthly influence, which has a commencement, will never, through all ages, have an end! Go out in the highways and hedges, and bring
The children of sorrow to feast with the King;
The poor, the wayfaring, the needier, the dumb!
With love their hearts inspirit, compel them to come!
All heaven with rapturous welcome shall ring;
Then his to the banquet, the feast of the King!
The guests who were bidden, despising the call,
Shall never be found in His banqueting hall;
But lips of the lowly His praises shall sing,
Who lovingly calls them to the feast of the King.
Though blessed the message, it brooks not delay;
To-day is the season appointed—to day.
Then tarry no longer, like weary take wing,
But hie to the banquet, the feast of the King.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from Exchanges:

The inhabitants of New Hebrides have consigned to London 3,700 pounds weight of arrow-root, by way of payment for an edition of the New Testament in their own language.

Assertions are current that the Irish bishops now in Rome have declared boldly to the Pope that they cannot do otherwise than support the action of the agitators against the Government.

The new deceased Bishop of Tournai is said to have in his possession an autograph letter from Pius IX., in which that Pontiff wrote that the election of Cardinal Pecci as his successor would be the ruin of the Church.

The English colony in Rome is building a church at the corner of Via Babuino and Gesuie Maria, on very difficult ground indeed. Two steam engines are not sufficient to keep the foundations dry and pump out the spring waters which collect here from all the surrounding hills.

The House of Keys, the representative body of the Manx Legislature, has passed a new Burials Bill for the island. The Bill runs greatly upon the lines of the Act adopted by the Imperial Parliament, but in some respects it is in advance of it with regard to the rights which it confers upon the Nonconformists.

The Spanish Government have intimated that they are prepared to extend the privilege of asylum to the members of the religious associations expelled from France only on condition that they do not form themselves into new societies, nor publicly wear the habit of their order. If the monks had been willing to accept this condition in France they might have remained there still without molestation.

According to the new Bishop of Liverpool, a bishopric is not the mine of wealth it is popularly supposed to be. He himself received from his diocese a sum of £2000 as a contribution towards the expenses of his removal to his new sphere of work, and to help him in furnishing. In acknowledging the gift, he writes that "the expenses which the acceptance of a bishopric entails upon a clergyman are so great that he believes many bishops have crippled for life who have not large private means."

A determined attack is being made to prevent Trinity (Episcopal) church, Montreal, falling into the hands of the Roman Catholics. Originally built chiefly for the officers and soldiers of the British regiment stationed in Montreal, the removal of the troops left it dependent upon the Protestants in the neighborhood, who are chiefly poor. This combined with an unwieldy debt has nearly brought it under the auctioneer's hammer, but efforts are being made to save it to the denomination.

A correspondent of the London Review, at Salonica, writing on the 14th instant, says: "The persecution of the wretched Christians continues with unmitigated severity. On Friday evening last forty unfortunates, among them a priest, were brought here for trial by the military court of the villayet. This much deference is paid to European opinion that the prisoners undergo a form of trial before being sentenced. Their condemnation is a foregone conclusion, as they will in due course be sent into exile in Africa or Asia. Do not think, however, that these are all. Those referred to arrived here by train, and I had dozens of others among their number. Many others also are continually sent by road from various parts of the provinces of whom no one hears." Writing a day later, the above correspondent adds: "This very evening a party of Christians—men, women and children—were brought down by train from the interior to go into exile. They numbered seventy in all, the women, with their children, accompanying their husbands."

WILMINGTON, N. C.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 29, 1880.

THE OLD YEAR AND THE NEW.

The flight of time, the changes of a year, the vanity of human greatness, the transitoriness of earthly things—these and like themes are suggested by the closing of the old year and the incoming of the new. But reflections on such themes are so trite and full of platitudes, we would fain avoid them. Perchance ours, too, should we dwell on such thoughts, would be equally as stale, flat and unprofitable.

Yet is is well that some such abrupt check in daily living should give us pause. We are compelled to change the date, to open new books and accounts, to strike a balance. And in business, if needful, how much more in morals! One of the most wholesome exercises of the spiritual life is mediation, and it is an exercise in these days of bustle and religious activities apt to be overlooked or unappreciated. Serious contemplation is demanded for spiritual growth, as truly as flowers require the sight. And this contemplation is not to be done for us by others and neatly bound in red-edged books of devotion. Each one for himself must ponder as well as pray. A half hour, alone with God, in earnest introspection each day, and these last and first days of the years spent in serious thought and self-examination, in hearty repentance, without maudlin sentimental self-reproach, will make no one a worse Christian. It is a great pity there is not more of it.

But a New Year suggests hope, plan, promise, and earnest endeavor. It is the era of resolution. Let it be also of action. There is a sort of epidemic of good resolves that breaks out now, especially in moral neighborhoods and among forgetful Christians. It is a sort of salve to a wounded conscience to promise to do better. But it is better not to vow than to vow and not pay. Nor let any one think that the New Year has brought him a benefit, that only brings a "resolution," however wise and imperatively demanded. Preambles are good, post-ambles are better.

Disappointment blocks the way. Past experiences chill and deject. It is so easy to get "the blues," as we think of how weak and poor and inefficient—how unfruitful, unthankful, unfaithful we have been. Let us turn our faces resolutely forward. Meet the future bravely. Do the next thing, be it great or small. It is a grand thing to live in these days. No factor is too insignificant to be without effect in the great problem of life.

"Still achieving, still pursuing," is the song that must ring in our ears, sweeten our dreams and beautify our lives.

And yet some who read these lines may long in vain for the chance to achieve. It is a glory to follow the field of battle, say they, but to pine in a hospital, to be helpless and useless when the great fight rages and the world is to be won for our King—this is too hard. Oh, no! dear friends. Nothing is too hard that our King appoints. And then He knows best both how to discipline and direct His troops. There is no weapon so potent, and no victory so grand as is seen in the chamber of patient suffering.

"The nerveless hand wields a mighty brand,
And the sick and the weak are strong for Him,
As patient they lie, 'neath His pitying eye,
And quietly wait as they long for Him."

But what shall the New Year bring us? What new revelations of pain and sorrow? What hours of anxious doubt and torturing fear? What opportunities of usefulness and development? What hopes and joys, duties and triumphs?

Whatever it brings is best for us. Let us accept its lessons. Let us rejoice in its burdens. With cheerful heart, finding Christ in all things, all duty, however humble, will be glorious, and all life, however lowly, will be holy. There are treasured tokens too precious for gold to buy—trinkets they may seem to others, yet to us more dear than priceless jewels. The touch of a vanished hand has forever hallowed them. Let it be thus with our lives, and the tender power of the love of Christ therein. Let every token be prized because given us by our best Friend. Let every sorrow be accepted with sweetest patience, because in His love He saw best that we should have it. Let every duty grow radiant and holy for He has imposed it. Let us live as under His eye.

It would be a happy year for us all, if in whatever way God saw best He should bring us nearer to Himself. The NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN, in wishing all its readers a happy New Year, as from our heart we do, could wish nothing better than this: that each one should be more like Christ; that on every duty of life, and the commonest implements of daily service, should be inscribed the grand legend, "Holiness to the Lord."

PROHIBITION.

In another column we publish a card "To the public," on the subject of a prohibitory law for the State of North Carolina. It will be observed that a State Convention is called for the 12th of January, prox. The time is short and it behooves the friends of temperance to bestir themselves. Let there be delegates from all sections of the State. It is pleasing to note that secular papers are coming out in favor of this measure, and that the movement seems to be growing into enthusiasm. The North State Press says—and we could expect nothing else from that quarter:

Let every christian man, woman and child take a hand and soon our good State will blossom with prosperity and the courts will be rid of two-thirds of the business that pile upon the docket of every county, and money will be saved to the tax payers in the way of bills of cost fastened upon the people by the result of liquor selling. Do a good work and you will never regret it.

And the Durham Recorder:

The question presents itself, and is the question of the hour,—shall individual freedom war against the best interests of the whole? One is granted a licence to distil; another a license to sell. His right to a living is thus guaranteed. But may it not be, that this right to a living involves at the same time the death of his patrons, the turmoil of communities, the animosities of individuals?

We believe they do; and shall make no objection to laws, which, not founded on temperance intolerance but on sound social principles, shall come in to say that prohibition shall be the governing principle of future State legislation.

The Farmer and Mechanic of Raleigh, comes out in favor of suppressing the liquor traffic in the following weighty words:

We can give the names of thirty young men, who like ourself, were barely able to vote when the war closed. They were young men who in physical and moral manhood, in social standing, in old family names, and in future prospects, had no superiors in North Carolina. Yet to-day, fourteen years later, all occupy forgotten graves, and many of them fell within half a dozen years!

Well, what shall be done? To our mind the only thing that can be done is to stop the manufacture of liquor. Nothing but a law, declaring all kinds of intoxicating drinks rank poison, and therefore under the ban, and subject to destruction wherever found, will do any good. We know, by personal experience, that no moral restraint, no appeal to manhood, no exertion of will-power, can stop the large majority of intemperate men from taking the fatal cup, just so long as they can get it. And so long as it is made they will have it. If costly, and hard to get, so much the worse for their pockets and their families.

Our secular exchange list is very small, and doubtless many other papers are in favor of the measure; even of our exchanges we may have overlooked some who would like to be classified as in favor of the good work. We will gladly publish the names of any that may come to our knowledge. The Methodist, Baptist and Presbyterian papers are committed to it strongly, and if we are not mistaken, the Church Messenger, the Episcopal organ is decidedly favorable to the movement.

NEW YEAR'S CALLS.

On the subject of New Year's Calls, and the practice of setting wine before guests Rev. Dr. T. L. Cuyler writes in a way that deserves thoughtful attention. No one can estimate the awful consequences which may ensue from offering the wine cup as a friend to friends. Dr. Cuyler says:

"Friend! here's a grip of your hand, and a hearty wish for a happy new year to you! Don't let that hand touch a drop of intoxicating poison, or it will be anything else than a happy day for you, or for your family. It would be a bad start. The ship that staves a hole in her bottom before she leaves Sandy Hook makes a poor beginning for a prosperous voyage. A glass of liquor on the first day of the year knocks a hole in your conscience and your character. Before the year is out, it may sink you into degraded drunkenness.

"What a happy new year it would be in thousands of houses if the parents would bang up a total-abstinence pledge on their wall, and resolve not to admit a drop of liquor into their home for the next twelve-month! The Lord would bless that home. The table would be better supplied. The children would be better clothed. There would be some extra money for books, and concerts and pictures, and for an occasional gift to the needy. No laboring man's pocket is long enough to hold drink-money and house-money too. If you try it, the dram-shop will get bold of all your pocket, and leave your household to go hungry.

"Young ladies! you will have many of your friends to call on you and wish you a 'happy new year!' Do you expect to offer wine or punch to any of your friends? Then you will be responsible for every glass you offer and for the consequences. If your wine makes any young man a drunkard, you will stand before God guilty of ruining him. He may be engaged to be married, and you will be ruining the prospects of the woman to whom he has pledged his heart and hand. He is somebody's son and brother. You are risking the happiness of the mother and sisters of you friend when you thoughtlessly offer to him that fatal glass. There is a serpent in it! You may not hear it hiss; but somebody else may feel its sting. Will it be a 'happy' memory of your New Year's Day to reflect that you put a deadly adder into any man's hand and heart?

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

The communication of "Clark" contains a great deal of wholesome truth, clearly and gracefully expressed. The subject, which he discusses is a sore evil under the sun and Presbyteries ought to see that it is abated.

Alabama is moving towards prohibition. A correspondent of the Tuskaloosa Gazette says: "Would it not be a glorious thing for Alabama to be the first State of the South to rise in her majesty and might and put the accursed traffic down?" A glorious thing, indeed, 'twould be. North Carolina, however, aspires to that honor, and we trust will attain it. It looks so now.

We have never seen a stronger argument in favor of prohibition than we saw, and that hundreds of other citizens saw, on Christmas day. We have seen a good many Christmases in Wilmington—few of its citizens have seen more—but never before did we see so much drunkenness on the streets. Men were staggering around the streets or prostrate on the walks, and this was disgusting enough, but boys in their teens were on the streets noisily, disgustingly, drunk. Never before did we see the like. May we never see the like again. There is a law, we are told, against selling liquor to minors. Who sold the liquor that made these boys drunk? and who will prosecute the offenders? No law enforces itself.

The publishers of the official report of the Presbyterian Alliance writes to us under date of December 22d:

"The sheets of Council book go to the bindery to-day. Expect complete books on Monday, and shall be pleased to receive your order. It will contain 1150 pages and will, we trust, give you good satisfaction."

Our friends will please send in, briskly and promptly, orders in connection with subscription to the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN.

A brother, who made a capital address at the last meeting of the Synod of North Carolina, thinks the article "Suggested Thoughts in Connection with a Meeting of Synod" in our last issue, refers to him, and to that address. The mistake is natural, but in truth the articles bearing the caption refer to the Synod of South Carolina. This was made clear in the first article of the series, and perhaps to prevent mistake we should have repeated the announcement.

We acknowledge the receipt of $2.35 from J. S. M. for donations of the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN.

The Presbyterian Journal has it:

"The Rev. Stephen Tyng was reckless enough, a few weeks ago, to speak favorably of the Lourdes miracles, and this is the way one of our Roman Catholic contemporaries meets him:

"'The Rev. Stephen Tyng is not a man to increase a belief in the supernatural. We who believe in the existence of an unbroken miraculous chain have to fear as a misfortune the possibility of his writing a book in defence of it.'"

Which, we take, is rather hard on Rev. Stephen Tyng.

In conversation with a friend one day, he made the remark: "I have been a pastor for several years, and have noticed that all men who have been troublesome to my church, who have been crooked, unyielding and ugly, have been men who did not take a religious newspaper. And you will see," he added, "that almost all church difficulties come from men who do not read religious journals." His views, frankly expressed, accord with our own, and were we now in the pastorate, we should endeavor to stock the church with good religious newspapers.—Western Recorder.

The Biblical Recorder calls this about right and we suspect that the Biblical Recorder is—correct.

No doubt many of our readers consider the denomination known as the Christian Church very insignificant in numbers and influence, yet it has in this State more than twice the membership of the Episcopal church and is three-fourths as large as the Presbyterian church in North Carolina. President Garfield is a member of this denomination and in connection with this fact some statistics of its size have been recently given which we quote below for the benefit of our readers:

Our contemporary, the Christian Observer, has taken to photography, and in its last gives a "Soliloquy," photographed from the minds of a few subscribers. The picture is well taken. Here it is:

"I have too much reading matter in my house; I have a daily secular paper that costs me ten dollars a year, and two secular magazines that cost seven dollars, and a secular paper for the children, and a secular paper about my manufacturing interests, and a secular paper published in the interest of the grange (or lodge), and a religious paper devoted to the cultivation of piety in my family. I must economize somewhere. Let me see. I cannot well cut off the secular papers; there is too much money-making and too much fun in them. I will stop the religious paper. True, it will leave the children nothing to read on Sunday, but they can read their Bibles—as much as they feel like—and play the rest of the time. It is true, it will cut off my own Sunday reading; but I can read the Sunday News, and I can sleep the rest of the day, or talk politics with neighbor Simpson. And as for wife—she will miss it a little—but then I must economize somewhere, and I cannot spare any of the secular papers. And if the children do not learn to love the Church—well, I reckon they will be saved somehow—but I must economize."

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

ASHEBORO CHURCH, ORANGE PRESBYTERY.

Rev. A. M. Watson writes: I am pleased to be able to report enough of additional members, with those reported previously, to double the membership of the Asheboro church within the last two months. On last Sabbath we received four, and baptized two heads of families, one the most earnest, prominent man of the town, who has always been useful as a leader in church matters, but of whom we now hope for greater things even. For the above blessing we thank God and take courage, earnestly praying for some dear friends who are still without the fold.

MANDARIN'S PROCLAMATION.

Rev. John W. Davis writes from Soochow, China, Nov. 3d, 1880:

Please lay before your readers the following fact: I have just succeeded in obtaining from the proper mandarin a proclamation with regard to my buying the new lot and building a Protestant church on it. This paper is properly stamped and it covers the whole case in a most full and satisfactory manner. It states the place where the land lies, giving the district, section, and street; it also gives the size of the lot and the name of the seller; that of the agent who bought the land for me and my name and nationality. It tells the people that this business has been examined into by the highest provincial authorities; that it is in all respects in accordance with international treaty; that the place has become the "possession of the Church of Jesus." It orders the people not to molest me in any way.

This is a very valuable paper. Without it I could hold the property without any trouble for the title-deeds given in June when the place was bought have all been stamped. But this proclamation confirms the title and I value it highly for that reason. The people were quiet enough before it was issued.

The work of building the church still goes on quietly and I hope to have the house ready for use by the middle of December.

P. S.—A word to those who take special interest in this matter; continue to pray for me. J. W. D.

In the matter of prohibition the towns and cities are waking up. The Young Men's Christian Association of Greensboro held a meeting and elected a delegate to the State Convention to be held in Raleigh. The pastors of various religious denominations were present and addressed the meeting. There will be several delegates sent from Greensboro. Wilmington will be represented in the Convention.

MISTAKE CORRECTED.

Mr. Editor: In a communication some weeks ago I made the mistake of saying that the Synod of Georgia had undertaken to raise $15,000 to supplement the endowment of Dr. Woodrow's chair in Columbia Theological Seminary. I ought to have written Georgia Professorship. Dr. Woodrow's chair is the Perkins Professorship. When the schemes now working are completed the Seminary will have five chairs. F. P. R.

SUGGESTED THOUGHTS IN CONNECTION WITH A MEETING OF SYNOD.

It was promised in the last that a plan for evangelizing the negroes would be discussed this week. Rev. Dr. J. Leighton Wilson suggested the co-operation of the Northern and Southern Presbyterians in building up a Negro Presbyterian Church to be independent of both the White Churches. He regards evangelistic work among our colored population as missionary work, to be conducted upon the same essential principles as such work among the Chinese or other unchristianized foreigners; and just as, in the late Pan-Presbyterian Council, he urged that all the Presbyterian bodies sending missionaries to China or other heathen countries, should work together in that country to build up one great Presbyterian church of that language and nationality, to be formed by the coalescing into one body of all the several native churches and presbyteries that are the immediate fruits of the several missionaries, and to be separate from the various Presbyterian churches thus sending missionaries to that country and independent of their control. So he would have Northern and Southern Presbyterians to co-operate in their work among the negroes. Let it be agreed that the colored churches founded by the labors of Northern or Southern men are to be organically connected with neither Assembly, but are to coalesce into one distinct Presbyterian church of the African race in the United States.

I have tried to state correctly Dr. Wilson's suggestion; but as it was only a suggestion, thrown out in an incidental discussion, and was not much enlarged upon by him, I may not have succeeded in faithfully representing his ideas, I feel sure I have stated his fundamental thought.

There are two great reasons in favor of such a scheme. One is the general principle that every people has its own peculiar characteristic and needs, determined in part by the inherent differences of different peoples, and in part by their differences of history and situation. It follows that every people needs a religious organization peculiar in non-essential features. The only way to secure for any people a Church specially fitted to their peculiar wants is to give them the truth of revelation in its simplicity and let a Church grow among them under the guidance of the Bible and the Spirit, and taking on a peculiar form according to the inherent peculiarities and historical circumstances of that people. We Presbyterians can best supply the religious wants of the negroes by giving them the fundamental truth of doctrine and polity as we understand the Word of God to teach it, and then letting them grow a Presbyterianism of their own, helping them from without but allowing them to develop within. As this principle underlies the present policy of the Southern Presbyterian Church toward them the plan of co-operation involves for us no change of principle in this respect.

The other great reason is the advantages of co-operation. All collision, and all sheer waste of energy by such collision, might be avoided. Such co-operation would remove the barriers between the whites and blacks that live together. The white Presbyterians of the South seeing that Northern Presbyterians were not working against us by building up among us a religio-political institution hostile to us, (as many of us now so far fear as to be a little jealous and to stand rather aloof—an unjust suspicion indeed, so far as the writer's observation goes,) would themselves more heartily work among the negroes with whom they live, by preaching, by Sabbath school and personal instruction, and by gifts and local aid. The negroes seeing no antagonism or jealousy between their religious friends of the North and the South, would lay aside their distrust of either party, (and specially of the Southerners,) in religious matters at least, and hence seek and improve the religious assistance of their white neighbors and of their Northern friends, more than can be expected now. The barriers being thus removed, Southern men, who more thoroughly understand the nature and wants of the negroes with whom they have lived all their lives, could be found, ready to consecrate themselves to this work. And it is a question whether Christian young men of the South would not take up this work out of motives more purely religious and unpolitical than young men of the North, for the political prejudices of the Southern young man would disincline him to the work, if they had any influence, while it is at least possible to conceive that a Northern young man might be moved to this work out of a mixed political and religious zeal—I mean under present circumstances. Any way, a number of men that have special fitness for this work, could be found ready to undertake it, were all obstacles removed. The great obstacle of want of means would be removed if there were a cordial understanding between the two Churches upon this matter. Besides the support of all Northern missionaries and institutions for the evangelization of the colored race, now existing or hereafter sent out or established. Northern wealth and liberty could unite with the offerings of Southern poverty to support Southern men and institutions for the same purpose.

Will not Christians North and South pray over this matter and let their common love for the souls of the colored race constrain them to find out some way of reconciliation?

I close with this query: If the Northern Church should be willing to trust the Southern Church so far as to join with them in such a scheme, would not the expression of such a willingness be a sufficient retraction (by implication) of any real or supposed aspersions upon our character as individual Christians and as a Christian Church?

ANNUAL COLLECTION FOR SUSTENTATION.

OFFICE OF HOME MISSIONS,
Baltimore, Dec. 24, 1880.

The object of this collection, appointed for the month of January, is to provide a fund which, as far as practicable, will suffice—

1. To assist some six hundred feeble churches in the support of their ministers.

2. To aid about one hundred poor congregations in their efforts to obtain houses of worship.

3. To help in evangelistic work among our large and necessitous colored population.

This is a great effort and will require united action and unusual liberality to give it success. The diligent prosecution of all these departments of labor is necessary to the vindication of our position as an active and useful branch of the Christian Church. That we "ought to support the weak," to help poor Christians to establish the ordinances of religion, and to give the Gospel to the ignorant and destitute are hardly more than truisms to those who live by the light of God's Word. That these efforts are necessary alike to our edification as Christians; to the honor, stability and growth of the Church; to the promotion of truth and righteousness in the land; to the salvation of our fellow-men, and to the spread of the Gospel throughout the world, is the teaching both of experience and revelation. We must, if we be true to ourselves, to the Church we love and to the Saviour we serve, address ourselves to this work with far more earnestness. It is painfully true that in times past we have come short of our privileges in this matter. It is gloriously true that an opportunity of redeeming former failures is now given us. Never were more hopeful openings presented for the wise expenditure of money in the upbuilding and strengthening of the Church of Christ than just now. Our gracious God seems to be calling us to enter upon great enlargement in His service. In all our borders the watchword is, "Forward!" Many of our feeble churches are showing signs of new life. Some which have long been vacant are sending out cries for help; others, lately organized, give promise of soon becoming strong and vigorous. Scores of our ministers, who, during these years of trial, have been forced to engage in secular employments, are panting to enter upon the work of preaching the Gospel, and our destitute fields and languishing churches are calling for their services. Everywhere there are signs of awakening and progress, and this we understand to be God's voice to us to come up to the help of the work with unwonted liberality, so that our waste places may be supplied, our feeble churches be made to grow and prosper, our ministers all be engaged in preaching the Gospel and our whole land be speedily blessed with the light and knowledge of Divine truth.

Fidelity to our obligations at such a time as this cannot fail to secure to us the Divine benediction and a large share in the glorious work of comforting the saints, edifying the Church and making known the salvation of Christ.

JUSTICE TO THE LEGISLATURE.

Mr. Editor: I always read with pleasure the articles by C. P. S. in the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN. There is something about the style that makes them readable and entertaining, whether one fully agrees to the sentiment or not. The views of C. P. S. are usually sensible and correct, but to the following paragraph from the article on the Historical Society I must except:

"A State that spends eight millions a year for liquor, while the Legislature refuses to appropriate one dollar for any State institution, either charitable, or educational, or literary; abolishes the office of State Geologist because of its expense; declines to build a house for the Governor to live in because of the expense; growls over and reduces the salaries of our public officers, and the estimate of even its Lunatic Asylum; acknowledges by no appropriation for its support even the existence of the University, or the existence of the State Historical Society! What shall we say of such a State? Is there any herald needed to marshal her the way she is going?" (Italics are mine.)

I would respectfully remind C. P. S. that the last Legislature, much abused as it has been for stinginess, made an annual appropriation of $45,000 for the support of the Insane Asylum, $32,500 for the Deaf & Dumb and Blind Asylum, $3,000 to the Orphan Asylum at Oxford (the first appropriation ever made to it), $2,000 each to the Normal Schools at Chapel Hill and Fayetteville, $20.000 to the Colored Asylum at Goldsboro, $25,000 to the Asylum at Morganton, $50,000 to the Cape Fear and Yadkin Valley R. R., $41,000 for the support of convicts on the Western Railroad, $30,000 to the Penitentiary, $19,000 for convicts on Cape Fear and Yadkin Valley Railroad, $1,500 for the celebration at King's Mountain, $50 to buy Bibles and religious books for Penitentiary.

C. P. S. was evidently mistaken, for these are surely appropriations to State institutions, charitable, educational, literary, patriotic and religious. EX-MEMBER.

IMPORTANT BOOKS.

FAIRBAIRN'S "REVELATION OF LAW IN SCRIPTURE,"—ROBINSON'S "SPIRITUAL SONGS FOR SOCIAL WORSHIP."

Mr. Editor:—I wish to call attention to two books,—very unlike indeed as your readers will perceive. I bring them into juxta position in this paper, because they are both lying upon my study table, and I have recently been examining them both. The former I have had for more than ten years, and am again reading or studying with fresh and increased interest and profit. It is "The revelation of law in the Scripture, considered with respect both to its own nature and to its relative place in successive dispensations." The third series of the "Cunningham Lectures," by Patrick Fairbairn, D. D., author of "Typology of Scripture," "Prophesy," &c., "Hermeneutical Manual," "Ezekiel and the Book of his Prophecy," "Bible Dictionary," "Lectures on the Pastoral Epistles," &c., &c. Dr. Fairbairn died suddenly, August 6th, 1874, of heart disease, in the 70th year of his age. He was certainly one of the most eminent ministers of Scotland, and at the time of his death, was principal of the Free Church College at Glasgow. The theme discussed in this book is specially appropriate; every religious newspaper almost, and the prevailing tendencies of the age within the evangelical Church and outside of it, evince the need and demand for such enquiry and discussion. If such books as these could take the place of many others which I could easily name, and be thoroughly studied by our ministers, the satisfaction to themselves, the benefit to their hearers, the confirmed faith in the truth, connections and grandeur of evangelical religion, would be vastly increased. An English reviewer says: "The subject of 'Revelation of Law in Scripture,' opened up new ground and it has been taken up in a most able manner;—it will become a standard work in theological science. The nine lectures, together with the supplementary dissertations and expositions of some sixteen passages from St. Paul's writings on the 'law,' make a volume which is invaluable to the biblical student."—Though it has been in circulation for more than ten years, published by Carter & Bros., New York, in 1869, I have some reason to believe that it has found its way into very few of our minister's libraries or hands. I do not think all the lectures are of equal merit. In the 2nd and 3rd lectures, especially the 2nd, where he discusses "the relation of man at creation to the moral law, there is much that is confused and ambiguous; he fails to state clearly, or at all, the end and aim of the Eden arrangement or covenant of works. If the student will just omit these chapters and in their place read Dr. Thornwell's three lectures, (x, xi and xii,) on Man, Moral Government and the Covenant of Works, and then go on with Dr. Fairbairn's lectures, he will find it increasingly satisfactory and interesting. Lecture 5th is "The position and calling of Israel as placed under the covenant of law,—what precisely is involved in it," &c. Lecture 7th is "The relation of the law to the mission and work of Christ," &c. Lecture 8th is "The relation of law to the constitution, the privileges and the calling of the Christian Church." Lecture 9th is "The re-introduction of law into the church of the New Testament, in the sense in which law was abolished by Christ and his apostles." His exposition of the most important passages—where the word (Gr. nomos) "Law," occurs in St. Paul's Epistles—sixteen in all—are invaluable. No one can preach or even understand the gospel, or the word "grace," unless he understands what law, sin, &c. are; and these studies are especially needful at the present time and amid the present tendencies of religious thought.

The other volume, as I said, is totally different from the foregoing. Dr. Chas. S. Robinson, D. D., has been for a number of years compiling and editing hymn and tune books, in the North. He is a minister of the Northern Presbyterian Church. His books seems to be popular and wide spread; they are admirably gotten up and are handsomely and cheaply published by Scribner & Co. I have repeatedly noticed very commendatory references to them,—some are "for the church and the choir;" some for use in social meetings," and some "for the Sunday School,"—all "with music." In the October number of the "Southern Presbyterian Review," the second above named is reviewed and very highly commended. The notice was so favorable that I sent for the second and third of the series. As to the tunes, music, &c., &c., I have nothing to say; there are a great many hymns entirely new, and some, if not all of them, are very good. But what I wish specially to say, and what was not said in the book notice above referred to, is that nearly all the old and familiar hymns are tinkered and tampered with and modified more or less. I compared over sixty of the old ones, in our Psalms and Hymns, and I found them altered to a greater or less extent, in words, lines or stanzas, so that the one book could not be used and ought not to be used with the other. If they are used together, the different singers will be singing different words. The new book is very deceiving, for while generally the first line remains unaltered, you are sure to be surprised, disappointed and vexed as you read on. In a few cases a change in the first line attracts your attention, as "Sing, all ye ransomed of the Lord," "Let saints below in concert sing," "On Jordan's rugged banks I stand," "Come, trembling sinner in whose breast," "Oh, sacred Head, now wounded." But generally the tinkering occurs in the other verses. I shall not name them all. I have lying before me, while I write, the first lines of fifty-five old hymns, modified and tampered with, and among them are these:

"Jesus who knows full well."
"Children of the Heavenly King."
"How pleasant how divinely fair."—Ps. 84.
"Great God attend while Zion Sings."—Ps. 84.
"From every stormy wind that blows."
"When high the heavenly temple stands."
"Alas and did my Savior bleed."
"Jesus my all to heaven is gone."
"Awaked by Sinai's awful sound."
"Lo on a narrow neck of land."
"A charge to keep I have."
"Blow ye the trumpet, blow."
"Behold a stranger at the door."
"Sinners will you scorn the message."
"Come ye disconsolate, &c."
"Sinners turn, why will ye die."
"Nearer my God, to Thee."
"Alas! what hourly dangers rise."
"Sweet was the time when first I felt."
"Jesus! lover of my soul."
"Am I a soldier of the cross."
"My soul be on thy guard."
"My faith looks up to Thee."
"Oh for a thousand tongues to sing."
"Rock of Ages cleft for me."
"Jesus, I love thy charming name."
"Come, let us join our friends above."
"On the gloomy hills of darkness," &c., &c.,

It is note worthy too, that the change seems sometimes made in the interest of new school or broader Calvinism,—with more of man and less of God. After reading over these altered hymns, I have asked myself if our Northern brethren have introduced, have learned, and are in the habit of singing these hymns—the new ones, and (for one book notice, North, says, "we find all our old favorites to the old familiar tunes,") the altered old ones,—and if these are current, it explains some of the tendencies in some regions of the general Church. J. HENRY SMITH.

Greensboro, N. C., 1880.

TO THE PUBLIC.

Several of the religious denominations, including the Baptists and Methodists, who are most numerous, have, through their representative bodies, declared in favor of a prohibitory liquor law; so have the temperance organizations; and it is not doubted that they are supported by a strong if not general public sentiment.

To give effect to this movement a number of persons met in the Hall of the House of Commons last night, December 15th, and were addressed by the president of the Prohibitory Liquor Law Association of North Carolina. After discussion and consideration it was determined to form a branch association for the purpose of issuing a call for a convention to be held in Raleigh, January 12, 1881, and further to constitute a central business committee to take in hand the conduct of the important prohibitory movement, electing Hon. E. G. Reade president, H. A. Gudger vice president, R. H. Whitaker secretary, and N. B. Broughton treasurer.

The undersigned were appointed a committee to prepare and issue a call for a convention of the friends of the movement to be held in Raleigh on the 12th of January, 1881.

The object of the convention will be to represent and embody public sentiment on the subject, and if found favorable to petition the Legislature, which will be then in session for a prohibitory liquor statute, to be effectual only when ratified by the popular vote.

There is no need that the committee should elaborate the subject. Nothing can be said on the evils of intemperance which has not been said a thousand times, and which is not seen and felt every day by everybody. What is needful is action. Get up. Go to work. Make haste. Be strong. Be earnest. Be hopeful. To doubt is to fail. "I can't do it" never accomplished anything, "I will try" has wrought wonders. Come to the convention. Urge the legislation. Pass the law and let the people ratify it. Tear up the evil by the roots. Give the people the opportunity to show that they are virtuous, and they will do it to the dismay of those who depreciate them. And then the schools will be opened; the churches will be filled; the children will clap their hands in gladness; the women will shout for joy, and the whole State will be arrayed in glory.

The plan is to forward to every pastor in the State, and to every temperance organization, and to every Christian association, every school, every postmaster, every factory, and to divers others, a form of petition to the Legislature, which they are requested to lay before their congregations, bodies and communities for their signatures, and then to transmit the same to the Prohibitory Liquor Law Convention, Raleigh, on or before the 6th of January, 1881.

The petition will be in the following simple form: "We petition the General Assembly of North Carolina to pass a 'prohibition liquor law,' to be submitted to the popular vote for ratification."

The time is short, and it is to be hoped that there will be the utmost activity in getting up the petitions.

The delegates to attend the convention may be designated by the petitioners, and the petitions which they bring with them will be their credentials.

The co-operation of the colored citizens is earnestly invited. None are more interested than they, and we declare an earnest desire for their prosperity.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

PRESBYTERIAN (SOUTH).

It is painful to announce that the failing strength of Dr. Stuart Robinson renders an associate in his pastoral labors necessary. The Second Presbyterian church of Louisville, Ky., has voted a call as co-pastor to Rev. Dr. G. B. Strickler of Tinkling Spring church in Lexington Presbytery.

A ten days meeting was held by the Presbyterians of Cynthiana, Ky., Rev. J. E. Triplett, in charge was assisted by Rev. H. Glass. Three persons all heads of families, united with the church. Forty-one persons have united with the church during the past year.

Rev. Dr. J. T. Hendrick informs the Christian Observer that in the church at Paducah they have a refreshing season of grace. Twenty-four persons have been added to the church, and lasting impressions it is hoped were made upon the multitude who attended. Dr. J. W. Hoyte, of Nashville, Tenn., assisted the pastor.

As the result of protracted services in the First Presbyterian church, Nashville, Tenn., in which Rev. J. W. Bachman of Chattanooga and Rev. Dr. Girardean assisted Rev. Dr. T. A. Hoyte, the pastor, there were fifty-six additions of which fifty were on profession of faith.

Dr. Girardean secured upwards of six hundred dollars at Nashville, Tenn., and about one thousand dollars at Louisville, Ky., for Columbia Seminary.

The post office address of of Rev. R. Douglass has been changed from Versailles to Lexington, Ky.

The post office address of Rev. James H. Smith is Fairfield, Rockbridge county, Va.

The Public Ledger of Portsmouth, Va., of date Dec. 20th announces:

Rev. J. M. Rose, pastor of the Presbyterian church in this city, has accepted the call of a congregation in Memphis, Tenn., and yesterday formally resigned his pastorate.

On Sabbath 19th inst., Rev. Louis Voss was installed pastor of the First German Presbyterian church in New Orleans.

The Presbyterian congregation at Williamsons on the Central and Ohio road, have purchased a lot and are about erecting a $1,200 church.—Staunton (Va.,) Vindicator.

The Christian Observer says: "At a meeting of the congregation of the Presbyterian church at Water Valley, Miss., held on Sunday, Dec. 12th, it was unanimously agreed to employ Rev. S. I. Reid of Hernando, Miss., for the whole of his ministerial services next year. He will enter upon his duties in January, and will move his family at once to that city."

And the same journal: "By order of the Presbytery of West Texas, a Presbyterian church was organized on the first Sabbath in December. Seven persons went into the organization from other churches on certificate, and two on profession of faith. Messrs. Jas. D. Anderson and James O. Murphree were chosen ruling elders. Their ordination and installation is appointed for the first Sabbath in January."

Rev. D. S. Stydenstricker writes to the Central Presbyterian from Pocahontas county, W. Va.: "Recently I conducted a meeting of several days continuance in the vicinity of Martin's, eleven miles from this place (Academy). Bro. McCown preached twice for me. On Sabbath the Lord's Supper was administered and three persons—heads of families—were received into the communion of the church on profession of faith. A church will be organized soon if the way be clear."

ELECTICISMS.

LITURGY FOR PRESBYTERIANS.

Christian Instructor:

The minister that has a heart full of petition and thanksgiving and confession and adoration himself will not have much trouble in leading a congregation that wants to pray. And the congregation that wants to pray will wish to follow the movements of the Spirit in the heart instead of the types of the printer.

HOW TO BE BUILT UP.

Congregationalist:

We sometimes hear it said of churches that they want a minister who will "build them up." Think of the contrast between what is usually meant in such cases and what Paul meant when he said, And now, brethren, I commend you to God and the Word of His grace, which is able to "build you up.

TO BEGIN THE CHRISTIAN LIFE.

Christian Union:

Many a man would like to begin the Christian life if he could begin it somewhere in the middle. If he could only turn about when nobody was looking; if when all the world were asleep or away he could slip quietly into the kingdom of God, and take his seat with the air of a man who had been seated there all the time! It is the turning over of the leaf when everybody is reading it—it is the right-about-face on the crowded street when everybody will see the act and what it means—this it is which makes it easier to put off till tomorrow the supreme duty which ought to be done to-day.

RAISE THEM UP.

Baltimore Presbyterian:

The colored men of this Republic, whether wisely or unwisely we will not say, of the requisite age and qualifications, are voters, hold in their hands the same power in the management of this government as is possessed by their white brethren; and possessing this power, it is the duty of every Christian citizen, of every lover of his country to seek to advance them, as well as all classes of voters and dwellers in this land, to a higher plane of intelligent Christian manhood. Ethiopia is not afar off, but at our doors, with the same powers, politically, as are possessed by the whites of the land, and, if from no higher motive than political self-preservation, self-advancement, we should seek to help to lift them up out of the depths of ignorance and superstition to the high ground of intellectual freedom and moral growth,—to be freedmen worthy of the name.

SYMPATHY BY SILENCE.

Orphan's Friend:

To give an expression of sympathy many words are not required; in many instances "silence is golden;" oftentimes all that is necessary is a tender clasp of the hand, "weeping with those that weep." Jesus, the tender, sympathizing friend of the sisters of Bethany, came to their home in the hour of their fierce strange grief, and thus reads the record, "Jesus wept." This was His manner of showing sympathy to these bereaved sisters. And sorrowing hearts that lean to Jesus ever since have found strong comfort in their time of sore need, for they know He is "touched with a feeling of our infirmities."

THE CHURCH NEEDS THEM.

United Presbyterian:

It is a beautiful story which describes a lady and her little daughter passing out of church when the child bade good bye to a poorly dressed little girl. "How did you know her?" inquired the mother. "Why, you see, mamma, she came into our Sabbath-school alone and I made a place for her on my seat, and I smiled and she smiled, and then we were acquainted." It was but a smile, but it did a great work. The whole Church needs more of these smiles, both because they are so pleasant in themselves, and because they lead to other things so much more important. It is good to be reverent and serious. Both of these are consistent with cheerfulness and the exhibition of the generous spirit which comes out in the brightness of the countenance. Let us have more smiles from old and young and all.

SECULAR MISCELLANY.

Schliemann, the excavator, is greatly aided in all his scientific labors by his wife, who disregards sun and dust to personally assist him in the work of excavation.

The great art of conversation consists in not wounding or humiliating any one, in speaking only of things that we may know, in conversing with others only on subjects which may interest them.

Dr. Ebners, the well-known Egyptologist, has obtained at Thebes an ancient Egyptian papyrus roll containing a treatise on medicine. Considerable space is devoted to diseases of the eye, in the treatment of which the Egyptians were very skillful. The fact is worthy of note, as very few of their modern descendants possess good eyesight.

A New York lady examining an applicant for the office of maid-of-all-work interrogated her as follows: "Mary, can you scour tin ware with alacrity?" "Perhaps I could ma'm, but I generally have scoured with sand."

A new use for glass is found in the manufacture of window shutters. These are now made of opal glass, decorated, and have the important advantage of being beautiful and easy to keep clean.

Do all the good you can, to all the people you can, as long as ever you can, in every place you can. This is the advice given by old Scotch David to his lassie.

It is but twenty-one years ago that the first oil well was sunk, and the annual product now is 15,000,000 barrels.

"Can a clergyman marry himself?" asks an exchange. We suppose he can, but we are afraid he would not be a happy couple.

The two best books for a child are a good mother's face and life.

In some parts of Europe and Asia the chestnut tree furnishes to millions of people their staff of life. Its fruit is used as a substitute for wheat.

Charles Reade has given to the mayor of New York, for planting in the Central Park, a package of slips from Shakespeare's mulberry tree at Stratford-on-Avon.

Last week Mr. Richard Holiday, desiring to taste the flavor of carp fish, drew from his pond two fish, one 15½ inches long and weighing one pound 11 ounces, and invited some friends to take breakfast with him. After giving the new fish a fair trial they all pronounced them equal to almost any and superior to many of the salt water fish, having none of the flavor of the mullet or sucker fish, and equal to rock or perch. These fish were obtained from Fish Commissioner Hughlett, just about one year from the day the breakfast was given. They were then only about two inches long, and have made their great growth since that time.—Centreville (Md.) Observer.

A novel way of catching a swarm of bees was unintentionally tried at Decatur, Mich. Harry Shoniters ran to them with a green bough in his hand. The queen bee poised herself over it, and then alighted on Harry's hat, and in a twinkling the whole swarm gathered about his head and completely covered him over. So closely were they knit together that Shoniters could hardly breathe. A box was procured and Shoniter's head was poked into it and gradually the bees worked off and safely hived.

The plainest features become handsome unawares when associated only with kind feelings, and the loveliest faces disagreeable when linked with ill humor or caprice. Young ladies should consider that sensible men think of this when they are selecting a face they are to see every day across the breakfast table for the remainder of their lives.

A man having a cock that was given to crowing by night as well as day gave him the name of Robinson. The reason why—Robinson crew so.

A rat upon the premises of J. Ershoffer of Washington was noticed to have upon his neck what appeared to be a yallow collar. A trap was set, the rat caught, and the collar was found to be a ring of bone fitting tightly about its neck. The theory is that the rat when it was small had found a bone, and gnawing out the centre, pushed his head through, and was unable to extricate himself. As he grew larger the ring tightened about his neck, and he wore it until death as a badge of his enterprise.

Since its opening St. Luke's Hospital, New York, has treated nearly seventeen thousand patents. Of this number over four thousand were Roman Catholics, thirteen hundred were Presbyterians, nearly one thousand were Lutherans, over twelve hundred were Methodists and Baptists, and thirteen hundred belonged to no specific denomination.—Presbyterian.

CURED OF CONSUMPTION.

When death was hourly expected, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting with the many herbs of Calcutta, he accidentally made a preparation which cured his only child of Consumption. His child is now in this country and enjoying the best of health. He has proved to the world that Consumption can be positively and permanently cured. The Doctor now gives this Recipe free, only asking two green stamps to pay expenses. This Herb also cures night-sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold up in twenty-four hours. Address CRADDOCK & CO., 1032 Race St., Philadelphia, naming this paper.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. W. SHERAR, 140 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

A GRAND REPUTATION.

Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure has reached a reputation that is not limited by the confines of section or country. There are no injurious substances nor false and temporary stimulants in the preparation. It is purely vegetable and compounded under a formula that has passed severe tests and won endorsements from some of the highest musical talent in the country.—N. Y. Herald.

HEADACHE is so common that some member of nearly every family is affected with it. The cause in most cases is a torpid action of the Liver, brought on by debilitating influences and impurities of the stomach. The habitual Sick Headache peculiar to some persons is permanently cured by taking Simmons Liver Regulator; ordinary Headache, which is only a symptom of deranged Stomach and Liver is readily cured by a few doses. And let all who suffer from Headaches remember that they can be prevented by taking a large dose of the Regulator so soon as their symptoms indicate the coming of an attack.

The Manufacturers of the above goods have made this offer solely for the reason that there are influences at work to interfere with the free sale of these old established manures in the State of North Carolina through the ordinary and legitimate channels of trade. They are determined that those farmers and planters of the State of North Carolina, who want to buy these goods, and have confidence in them, shall have the opportunity of doing so, without fear or favor, at the lowest possible prices—and upon a plan which compels them to pay no profit to an intermediate party.

This offer is made only to farmers and planters who intend to use the goods themselves, and is strictly limited those who live in the State of North Carolina.

FOR THE FAMILY

Choosing Occupations.

Four little girls sat down to talk one day beside the brook,
Miss Lucy said when she grew up she meant to write a book,
And then the others had to laugh, till tears were in their eyes,
To think of Lucy's writing books, and see her look so wise.

Miss Susie said she always thought she'd like to teach a school,
And make the horrid, ugly boys obey her strictest rule,
Miss Jennie said she'd keep a store where all the rest must buy,
And they agreed to patronize if "prices weren't too high"

Miss Alice said she'd marry rich, and have a diamond ring,
And give a party every night, and "never do a thing!"
But Nellie, youngest of all, shook out each tumbled curl,
And said she'd always stay at home, and be her mother's girl!

Jack White.

The streets were icy and the snow was beginning to fall. It was cold, too, and as poor Jack White stood looking in at the window of the toy-shop, he thought his feet would freeze. Still, there he stood, looking in eagerly at a little girl warmly dressed in plaid and furs. Her grandpa was buying a doll for her,—a beautiful great doll, with long hair and elegant dress.

As Jack stood there, his thoughts wandered back to another little girl,—one not at all well dressed, but none the less dear to him for that. She, he knew, was lame and sick at home, and oh—what a treasure would that great open-eyed doll be to her!

"Just about as big," said Jack to himself; and he looked longingly, first at the little girl, and then at the doll which she held in her hand.

"Oh! if I were only rich," thought Jack, "I don't know what would be the first thing I would buy?"

But wishing was in vain, and Jack's feet were very cold. So he took his eyes away regretfully from the little girl and the doll, and was just about to start on a quick run down the icy street to try and make himself warm.

Suddenly the door opened just then, and the little girl and her grandpa came out. She was holding to his arm with one hand, while with the other she held tightly to the doll which had so much excited Jack's envy. As she came out from the store with a merry little bound, she caught sight of Jack as he stood by the lighted window just ready to run off.

"O grandpa!" said Jenny, with a gay little laugh, "see, Jack White's out of jail;" and she pointed directly at the boy and laughed again.

"Out of jail;" thought Jack, and he was very angry; for he did not know that Jenny saw his shirt-sleeve peeping through the elbow of his jacket, and that was what she called "Jack White out of jail." Jenny had never seen the boy before. She did not know his name, and had no thought of hurting his feelings. So she tripped along very happy, while Jack, who hardly knew why he did so, followed slowly, keeping himself carefully out of sight.

The next moment she saw her mamma across the street, and, loosing her hold of grandpa's hand, ran to meet her; but, slipping upon the ice, she fell almost under the feet of Dr. Gray's fast horse. Jenny gave a little scream, and quick as thought Jack darted out and caught her up, just in time to prevent the horse from running over her. The doctor stopped his carriage to ask whether the little girl had been hurt, but Jack had brought her safely to the sidewalk.

Mrs. Williams was very pale when she came across, for she could scarcely believe that Jenny was not hurt at all.

"No, no, mamma! It didn't hurt me a bit," she said. "But I was frightened. Wasn't he a kind boy to help me, mamma?"

"Yes, yes," said grandpa. "Whare is the boy?" But Jack had turned the corner and was nowhere to be seen.

"Here's the little rascal!" said a man, catching hold of Jack's collar. He had seen him run, and Mr. Williams looked round as if to find him. "Here's the rascal, sir. I caught him as he was just turning the corner. What mischief has he been doing now?"

"Mischief, sir!" said Mr. Williams. "I thank you for bringing him back, for he has saved my little girl's life. Here, my boy, what should you like better than anything else in the world? Speak out now, and you shall have it if I can get it for you."

Jack did not answer. His hands wandered nervously up and down his ragged jacket, and his face began to get uncomfortably hot.

"Come," said Mr. Williams kindly, "What would you like better than anything else?"

"Better than anything else, sir?" said Jack. "Why, it's a doll, sir, thank ye."

"A doll, my boy! Surely you can't wish to play with it," responded Mr. Williams.

"O no, sir!" answered Jack; "but it's for Sister Hetty, sir. She's lame and sick, and oh, if she could have a doll! Yes, sir; I'd like that better than anything, sir."

"What's your name, my boy?" asked Mr. Williams.

"Jack White, sir. But I didn't come out of jail, sir. It made me mad when she said so, sir," and he pointed his thumb at Jenny. "But I tell you true, I never was in it, sir. She's just about as big as Hetty, an' that's what made me forget I was mad when I thought she'd get run over, sir."

"Did you think Jenny meant that, Jack? She did not know your name," said Mr. Williams. Then he explained the saying to Jack, and, taking him into the toy-shop, bought him the most beautiful doll he could find, and also a nice hobby-horse to take little Hetty out to ride.

"And now you must have a new suit, Jack," he said; "and Hetty will need a warm cloak and hood."

So Jack went home with his sled full of packages, and his poor, little lame sister's eyes sparkled with joy when she saw the doll and heard Jack's story of how he had earned it.—Lilian Payson.

About Hornets.

There is an old woman on Catherine street who delights to find a case that all the doctors have failed to cure and then go to work with herbs, roots and strange things and try to effect at least an improvement. A few days ago she got hold of a girl with a stiff neck, and she offered an old negro named Uncle Tom Kelly fifty cents to go to the woods and bring her a hornet's nest. This was to be steeped in vinegar and applied to the neck. The old man spent several days along the Holden road, and yesterday morning he secured his prize and brought it home in a basket. When he reached Central Market he had a few little purchases to make, and after getting some tea at a grocery he placed his basket on a barrel near the stove and went out to look for a beef bone.

It was a dull day for trade. The grocer sat by the stove rubbing his bald head. His clerk stood at the desk balancing accounts, and three or four men lounged around talking about the new party that is to be founded on the ruins of Democracy. It was a serene hour. One hundred and fifty horses had gone to roost in that nest of the winter. The genial atmosphere began to umber them up. One old veteran opened his eyes, rubbed his legs and said it was the shortest winter he had ever known to all his horned days. A second shook off his lethargy and seconded the motion, and in five minutes the whole nest was alive and its owners were ready to sail out and investigate. You don't have to hit a hornet with the broadside of an ax to make him mad. He's mad all over all the time, and he doesn't care a pinayune whether he tackles a humming bird or an elephant.

The grocer was telling one of the men that he and General Grant were boys together, when he gave a sudden start of surprise. This was followed by several other starts. Then he jumped over a barrel of sugar and yelled like a Pawnee. Some smiled thinking he was after a funny climax, but it was only a minute before a solemn old farmer jumped three feet high and came down to roll over a job lot of washboards. Then the clerk ducked his head and made a rush for the door. He didn't get there. One of the other men who had been looking up and down to see what could be the matter, felt suddenly called upon to go home. He was going at the rate of forty miles an hour when he collided with the clerk and they rolled on the floor. There was no use to tell the people in that store to move on. They couldn't tarry to save 'em. They all felt that the rent was too high, and that they must vacate the premises. A yell over by the cheese box was answered by a war-whoop from the show-case. A howl from the kerosene barrel near the back door was answered by wild gestures around the show window.

The crowd went out together. Uncle Tom was coming in with his beef bone. When a large body meets a smaller one the larger body knocks it into the middle of next week. The old man laid around in the slush until everybody had stepped on him all they wanted to, and then he sat up and asked:

"Hev dey got de fish all put out yet?"

Some of the hornets sailed out of the doors to fall by the wayside, and others waited around on top of barrels and baskets and just to be slaughtered. It was half an hour before the last one was disposed of, and then Uncle Tom walked in, picked up the nest and said:

"Mebbe dis will cure de stiffness in dat gal's neck, jist de same, but I tell you I'se got banged, an' bumped, an' sot down on till it will take a hull medicine college all winter long to git me so I kin jump off a street kar!"—Detroit Free Press.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Missionary Pennies.

Children should be taught to give money for the cause of Jesus Christ. We are all creatures of habit, and in this particular the earlier the habits are fastened the better it will be.

Those who are familiar with the Pilgrim's Progress will recall that, when the little company under the lead of Greatheart were entertained at the house of Gains there was a good deal of innocent hilarity at the dinner-table. The travelers were tired and their appetites were keen. And so much comfort and so much rest coming at once put them in the best of spirits. After a few old-fashioned jokes and sage attempts at pleasantry, pious Mr. Honest gravely announced his intention of propounding a riddle. He gave it thus:

"A man there was, though some did count him mad,
The more he cast away the more he had."

Their most respected host understood instantly that the puzzle was aimed at him, and that everybody lingered anxiously for an impromptu reply. He paused a while, however; but whether to guess the answer, or to frame the couplet into which he wished to put it at his best, we are not informed. It is not every man in this world, even amongst those who keep hotels that can make poetry to order, but Gaius finally offered his solution in comfortable rhyme:

"He who bestows his goods upon the poor
Shall have as much again, and ten times more."

At this juncture one of Christian's boys impulsively broke in, "I dare say, sir, I did not think you could have found it out." The genial old gentleman answered, "I have been trained up in this way a great while;" nothing teaches like experience; I have learned of my Lord to be kind, and have ever found that I gained thereby."

Then he went on to clinch his remark with an apposite verse from the Scripture: "There is that scattereth yet increaseth, and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty. There is that maketh himself rich yet hath nothing; there is that maketh himself poor yet hath great riches." And then (so continues the narrator) Samuel whispered to his mother: "This is a very good man's house; let us stay here a great while."

Lichens.

As in some sense the humblest, in another sense they are the most honest of the earth children. Unfading as motionless the worm frets them not, and the autumn wastes not. Strong in loveliness, they neither blanch in heat nor pine in frost. To them slow-fingered, constant-hearted, is intrusted the weaving of the dark, eternal tapestries of the hills; to them, slow-penciled, iris-dyed, the tender framing of their endless imagery. Sharing the stillness of the unimpassioned rock they share also its endurance; and while the winds of departing spring scatter the white hawthorn blossom, like drifted snow, and summer dims on the parched meadow the droopings of its cowslip gold—far above, among the mountains, the silver lichen spots rests, star-like, on the stone, and the gathering orange stain upon the edge of yonder western peak, reflects the sunsets of a thousand years.—Ruskin.

Rossini's Mose in Egitto.

When Rossini, being then on a visit to London, entered, so says a London paper of 1824, "he was received with loud plaudits, all the persons in the pit standing on the seats to get a better view of him. He appeared stout and somewhat below the middle height, with rather a heavy air, and a countenance which, though intelligent, betrayed none of the vivacity which distinguishes his music.

Mose in Egitto is one of the works upon which are founded Rossini's most solid claims to immortality. In Mose, Rossini carried out still further than ever his innovations, the two principal roles—Mose and Faraoni—being assigned to basses. On the first representation the crossing of the Red Sea moved the audience to satirical laughter, which disconcerted the otherwise favorable reception of the piece, and entirely spoiled the final effects. The manager was at his wit's end, till Tottola, the librettest, suggested a prayer for the Israelites before and after the passage of the host through the oleft waters. Rossini instantly seized the idea, and springing from bed in his night-shirt, wrote the music with almost inconceivable rapidity, before his embarrassed visitors recovered from their surprise. The same evening the magnificent 'Dal stuo stellato soglio' (To Thee, Great Lord!) was performed with the opera.

Stendhall, Rossini's biographer, tells the rest of the story: "The audience was delighted, as usual, with the first act, and all went well till the third, when the passage of the Red Sea being at hand, the audience as usual prepared to be amused. The laughter was just beginning in the pit, when it was observed that Moses was about to sing. He began his solo, the first verse of a prayer, which all the people repeat in chorus after Moses. Surprised at this novelty, the pit listened and the laughter ceased. The chorus, exceedingly fine, was in the minor. Aaron continued, followed by the people. Finally Elcia addresses to Heaven the same supplication, and the people respond. Then all fall on their knees and repeat the prayer with enthusiasm; the miracle is performed, the sea is opened to leave a path for the people protected by the Lord. This last part is in the major. It is impossible to imagine the thunders of applause that resounded through the house: one would have thought it was coming down. The spectators in the boxes, standing up and leaning over, called out, at the top of their voices, 'Bello, bello! Ocha bello!' I never saw so much enthusiasm, nor such a complete success, which was so much the greater, inasmuch as the people were quite prepared to laugh. * * * * I am almost in tears when I think of that prayer. This state of things lasted a long time, and one of its effects was to make for its composer the reputation of an assassin, for Dr. Cottegna is said to have remarked, 'I can cite to you more than forty cases of nervous fever or violent convulsions on the part of young women, fond to excess of music, which have no other origin than the prayer of the Hebrews in the third act, with its superb change of key.'"—French Composers.

A Curious Combat.

A traveler in South Africa witnessed not long since a singular combat. He was musing one morning, with his eyes on the ground, when he noticed a caterpillar crawling along at a rapid pace. Pursuing him was a host of small black ants.

Being quicker in their movements, the ants won'd catch up with the caterpillar, and one would mount his back and bite him. Pausing, the caterpillar would turn his head, and bite, and kill his tormentor. After slaughtering a dozen or more of his persecutors, the caterpillar showed signs of fatigue.

The ants made a combined attack. Beating himself to a stalk of grass, the caterpillar climbed up tail first, followed by the ants. As one approached, he seized it in his jaws and threw it off the stalk.

The ants, seeing that the caterpillar had too strong a position for them to overcome, resorted to strategy. They began sawing through the grass-stalk. In a few minutes the stalk fell, and hundreds of ants pounced upon the fallen caterpillar. He was killed at once, and the victors marched off in triumph, leaving the foe's body on the field.

Eastern North Carolina.

The attention of immigrants and truck farmers is being directed to the lands of Eastern North Carolina by the reports of the fine crops produced under the double crop system, as practised around Newbern.

This portion of the State is indented with sounds, bays, rivers and creeks and is quite near the ocean, which gives it a warm, moist atmosphere in the spring months, making it one of the best trucking localities of the South. The land around Newbern is pre-eminently the pea producing section of the South. We cannot produce peas as early as Florida or South Carolina, but we send them early to April when Virginia lambs are fat, when the demand is largest and the highest prices are obtained. This is the whole secret of our success in pea culture. Truck farming is rapidly developing at Newbern, Morehead, Havelock, Newport and at other points on the warm water courses of Eastern Carolina, and large crops of peas, potatoes, turnips, tomatoes, strawberries, melons, etc., are shipped via railroad and steamers to all the principal Northern cities. This kind of agriculture employs a large number of laborers in planting and gathering the crops and it distributes in the spring months considerable money.

The pea crop is planted early in February and is gathered in April, when the same land is immediately planted in cotton, which is picked in October, giving two marketable crops per annum. This fact, that two crops can be produced in this portion of North Carolina, which is warmed by the near approach of the Gulf Stream, is bringing experienced Norfolk truckers to Newbern and is causing larger crops to be produced each year. This means better pay for labor and greater prosperity.

A field which netted one hundred and thirty dollars per acre in peas last April has yielded over six hundred pounds per acre of flat cotton. The cotton crop of this section is very fine, and it is probably the largest ever raised by our farmers. We hope to make up our report of one thousand bales of cotton from one thousand acres.

The rice crop is now being harvested and promises a fine yield; the crop of this immediate section is estimated at fifty thousand bushels, much of which will be cleaned in Newbern at the new rice mill. We have reports as high as sixty bushels per acre.

The Newbern wood plate factory is a decided success, and furnishes nearly all the stamped circular wood plates that are used by the grocers in the entire Union. Over fifty thousand plates are made and shipped to New York each day. This enterprise gives employment to about one hundred operatives and laborers, giving a support to several hundred people.

Other industrial enterprises are at work, and Newbern is feeling the good effects of the steady employment and wages paid to operatives and laborers.

The South has passed through trying times, but prosperity is now visiting every portion of this fair land. Improved implements and culture are giving increased crops; steam engines are displacing horse powers; factories are being erected, population has increased from thirty to forty per cent. during the past ten years; immigration has turned Southward; land is increasing in value, and we trust that "hard times" are nearly over. GEO. ALLEN.

STATE NEWS.

The little darkey acted upon the suggestion, blazed away and Mr. Hair felt the charge enter the fleshy part of one of his legs. It made a hole as large or an inch and a quarter deep, and through the doctors probed the wound, they failed to find the charge. The cartridges are marked "blank," and what this one contained cannot be told, but Mr. Hair knows that it was not blank—not by a large majority.—Statesville Landmark.
